The Marquis of RIPON said that he might fairly claim that while he was in India the public had at all times the fullest opportunity of considering everything that came before the Legislative Council. Therefore it would be unfair towards the present Viceroy if he did not ask the House to allow him to express his entire approval of the course his noble friend Lord Dufferin had taken in passing the Bill during the present sittings of the Council. The Bill had been before the Council for two whole years, and had been under the consideration of the public for a great deal longer. It had been taken up long before he went to India; one portion was considered in 1877, but it was found impossible to deal with it alone. For that reason the Commission was issued to which reference had been made. When he went out to India that Commission was about to report or had just reported; he did nothing until he received from the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal his opinion upon the subject. These recommendations were then fully considered by the Government of India and the Bill of 1883 was brought in. After the Bill was published a great many observations were made upon it by those interested, and a Select Committee was appointed to consider the subject. As regarded the position of that Committee, he might mention that he took an unusual step, being anxious that the interests of the zemindars should be fully and completely represented. There happened to be two vacancies in the Legislative Council, and he requested the zemindar to recommend to him gentlemen to fill them. This they accordingly did, and the result was that the zemindars were very ably represented. The Committee reported in 1884, making considerable changes in the Bill. The Bill was then reprinted, and from March to November, 1884, was before the public. If there was any subject which had been fully and thoroughly discussed, it was the law of landlord and tenant in Bengal. The time had now in his opinion come when Lord Dufferin was perfectly justified in passing the Bill. The changes which had been made in the Bill were, as his noble friend had explained, entirely in favour of the zemindars. Although knowing nothing about the changes, he was inclined to think that they were likely to be too much in their favour. He entirely concurred in the opinion expressed by his noble friend the Secretary for India that Lord Dufferin was perfectly right in passing the Bill, as the measure had been most fully and amply considered in all its bearings.

The EARL OF WEMYSS remarked that he did not in the least dispute that the discussion on this measure had lasted over many years. The point he raised was that the changes made in the Bill by the late Committee were such that the Bill ought to have been reprinted and circulated before being passed. All that they asked for was to have an opportunity of seeing the Bill. As to the character of the Bill, he would not discuss it further except by stating that Sir Richard Garth, the Chief Justice, had said that he looked with horror and dismay upon this revolutionary measure.

The EARL OF KIMBERLEY explained that he had received a copy of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee; what he had not received was a copy of the Bill as passed only a day or two ago by the Council.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY, MARCH 12th.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

Sir H. MAXWELL asked whether the telegraphed information in the Times that the Bengal Tenancy Bill had passed was correct, and whether it was true that 250 zemindars had gone to Calcutta to petition for delay, and that the delay had been refused.

Mr. Cross.—The Bill has passed. After the discussion that took place on the motion of the hon. baronet the other night for the adjournment of the House I telegraphed to the Viceroy. I was not able to get the exact wording of the telegram which the hon. baronet had quoted, as when I asked the hon. baronet for it he had left it at home. (The hon. gentleman then read the telegram sent to the Viceroy and the reply, both of which appear in the report of the proceedings in the House of Lords.)

Sir H. MAXWELL explained that he was not asked for the telegram until after dinner, when he had changed his clothes and left the telegram at home—(a laugh).

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—What a strange nation we are! At one time we are like children amused with toys; and suddenly, when we are exciting the ridicule of the world, we are found to be a nation of heroes.

One of our most absurd games at present is, our anxiety to make connections between idols in India. When I was a boy we used to read of horrid Juggurnath, the lord who delighted in human blood, who used to be conveyed in a huge rolling car, and who was highly gratified by his worshippers prostrating themselves under the wheels and being crushed to death.

In Colonel Stanton's Railway Report received last month in London, I find great prominence given to what are called the Benares-Cuttack and Cuttack-Poorree railways; while only three pages are allotted for notices of the railway connecting Bombay with Calcutta, nine folio pages are devoted to the proposed rail connecting bloodthirsty Juggurnath with the numerous gods of Benares; upwards of 500 miles of railway through barren or rather jungly land, costing upwards of six millions of pounds sterling; one river to be bridged, the Mahanuddi or great river, varies in width from 3,000 feet to two miles.

It may be said that we have invented something far superior in civilization to the invention of the guillotine. Hitherto the worshippers of Juggurnath have had their ribs and legs scrunched in a very unscientific manner; in future they will be able to recline on the steel rails in an æsthetic fashion.

While we are occupied with this toy railway we neglect other lines of Imperial road, without which 250 millions of human souls live in constant dread of a Russian invasion, i.e., of slaughter by Gog and Magog. Forty years ago we understood what Military lines of road meant; twenty years ago we understood what commercial lines were wanted; now we direct our courteous attentions and energies to pilgrims and their idols. Perchance there may be some poet in the India Office who wishes to bring out an Indian poem in imitation of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

My advice is, make your Military Lines first. Connect Jubbulpoor with Nagpoor as General Lord Wolseley has recommended. Connect Roichoor with the sea at Karwar, and Hyderabad in Sindh with Pahlampur. Commerce cannot flourish if India be plundered by robbers. Idols will not save us, when we are threatened by Cossacks.

All of the three Military railways required can be constructed for one half of the estimated cost of the idolatrous toy.—Your obedient servant,
T.
March 11th.

The Madras Mail says:—The selection by H. E. Sir Frederick Roberts, of the 23rd Wallajahbad Light Infantry, to represent the Madras Army in the Indian Brigade under orders for active service in Egypt, has been temporarily countermanded for reasons that have not yet transpired. It was made doubtless in accordance with the determination expressed by his Excellency in his speech at the conclusion of the Southern India Rifle Association Meeting at Bangalore in October last, namely, that should the opportunity ever be presented to him of selecting regiments for active service, he should, ceteris paribus, make his choice from those who had most distinguished themselves in their musketry practice. In the year 1883-84 the 23rd Light Infantry stood at the head of the list of the Madras Infantry Regiments, and we are informed on the best authority that this year again they are at the very top of the tree. Great efforts are being made to improve the shooting powers of the Madras Army, and the high honour shown to the 23rd on this occasion cannot but prove an incentive to still greater exertions.

BENGAL, UPPER INDIA &c.

THE Nawab Salar Jung, now on a visit to Calcutta, had an interview with the Viceroy a few days ago.

THE Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived at Agra on a visit on the 18th ult.

THE Masonic Fraternity of Allahabad have honoured Mr. F. T. Atkins by electing him Worshipful Master of the Mark Lodge "Lebanon," and also as first Principal Z of Royal Arch Chapter "Sandeman."

UPON the recommendation of the Judge who presided at the trial, the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces has remitted the remainder of the sentence of imprisonment passed on E. R. Berry, who, it will be remembered, was convicted in the autumn sessions of the High Court of participation in municipal speculations in Ajmere.

A VERY OLD SERVANT.—An agitation is going on regarding a proposal to afford some public recognition of the services of Mr. H. W. I. Wood, the retiring Secretary of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, after a career of close upon half a century. The Bonded Warehouse Association have pensioned Mr. Wood, and the Chamber of Commerce will probably give him an allowance.

MADRAS.

THE Government of India has sanctioned the immediate commencement of earthworks for the Guntakul-Hindupore Railway in the Bellary district as a relief work.

OWING to the failure of the water supply in Mysore great anxiety is felt for the safety of the crops. Prices have already risen considerably, and scarcity is felt in some districts.

A SERIOUS disturbance took place in the Hyderabad Central Jail on February 25th. The military were called out, and nine of the prisoners were shot dead and thirty wounded before quiet was restored.

HIS EXCELLENCY MONSIEUR RICHAUD, Governor-General of the French Settlements in India and Governor of Pondicherry, with Madame Richaud, has arranged to pay a return visit to his Excellency the Governor of Madras, under present arrangements, on the 15th instant.

THE Madras Mail is "glad to hear that the Government of Madras will not leave Madras for Ootacamund so early this year as it did last year, and that the Government of India will remain in Calcutta beyond the date of Lord Ripon's departure last year for Simla. These small changes in a right direction will be approved on all sides.

THE BELLARY CLUB CASE.—We learn that Mr. Gompertz has instructed his counsel to prefer an appeal to the High Court against the decision of Mr. W. H. Grahame, the District Judge of Cuddapah, who dismissed the suit brought by him against the Committee of the Bellary Club for damage and for restoration to membership.—Times.

BOMBAY.

H.E. THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF BOMBAY arrived in Bombay on Sunday the 22nd ult.

H.E. SIR JAMES FERGUSSON presided on the 20th ult. at the distribution of prizes to the pupils attending the Elphinstone High School, Bombay.

THE services of Mr. W. Clerke, A.B., M.I.C.E., have been placed at the disposal of the Bombay Municipality by Government for employment on special duty in connection with the Tansa project for the water supply of Bombay. Mr. C. N. Clifton has been appointed to act as Executive Engineer for Irrigation, Poona, vice Mr. W. Clerke.

CEYLON.

THE Dairawelle Race Meeting came off on the 14th instant, when nine events came off with great success before a large assemblage of residents.

NORTH-CENTRAL PROVINCE.—The Governor has sanctioned the expenditure of a sum of Rs. 2,000 for providing channels for the purchasers of land under the Tissawewa and Basawakkulam tanks.

MR. J. R. Loos, Deputy-Registrar of the Supreme Court, has been suspended from office pending further investigation into certain charges brought against him, which have been the subject of inquiry for some time past.—Observer.

FEVER AND PURCHASE OF QUININE.—Owing to the enormous demand for quinine during the prevalence of fever in different parts of the island, the Government has been compelled to purchase a considerable quantity of it in the local market. It is said that never before was there such a demand for fever medicines.—Cor.

THE Planters' Association held its annual meeting as usual on the 17th February, when there was a good attendance of members, and some business of interest to transact. After reading and adopting the report, on the proposal to elect a successor to Mr. Wall as chairman, Mr. Christie was unanimously chosen, and acknowledged the honour paid him. Mr. Wall's resolution for the election of a Vice-Chairman was carried. Messrs. Gibbon and Forbes Laurie were proposed; both declined. It was ultimately decided to postpone the election of a Vice-Chairman. The Secretary was re-elected. Mr. Wall's resolution on Colonial Government was as follows:—"To invite the attention of members to the general feeling of dissatisfaction prevailing in Her Majesty's colonies, especially in Ceylon, with the present system of administering colonial affairs from Downing Street, and to move for a Sub-Committee to consider the report upon the best means of promoting the transference of the functions of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to an Imperial Council, whose proceedings should be conducted publicly, like those of Parliament, and in which all the colonies should be represented." This met with strenuous opposition from Mr. Borron and Mr. J. L. Shand, and, although the motion was ably urged by Mr. Wall in a speech of some length, he found but one vote for him; nothing, therefore, came of it.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

—O—

COLONEL CHESNEY, the Military Secretary, goes on a year's furlough from the end of March. Colonel Newmarch has been appointed to officiate in his absence.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL TOKER, of the 18th Bengal Infantry, acts as brigade-major to General Wilkinson at Fort William in the place of Major Cook, who has proceeded on active service.

We learn by telegraph that the Secretary of State has, in reply to a representation from the Government of India, consented to consider on their merits the cases of officers of superior rank as secretaries of Government, military controllers, commissaries-general, judge advocates-general, and those holding special appointments, who, under the Indian Army Circular of August 1884, must vacate on completing a five years' tenure of office. In cases of approved ability and merit such officers will be re-appointed after completing a five years' term, and permitted to continue in their appointments until thirty-two years' service for pension is served.

A FEW days since new colours were presented to the Connaught Rangers at Meerut by the Duchess of Connaught. At the conclusion of the ceremony the Duke, who spoke for the Duchess, addressed the regiment. Speaking of the honourable part the regiment had always borne, as testified by the large battle scroll on its colours, his Royal Highness expressed his conviction that by those whom he addressed would these colours be borne as honourably in sovereign and country's cause as the old colours had been in days gone by, and in this confidence the Duchess committed to the custody of the regiment these new ensigns. Replying, Major Acklom, in temporary command, addressing the Duchess of Connaught, said:—"Your Royal Highness, it is with feelings of the deepest gratification, as well as of loyalty and devotion to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen and to our great and noble country, that we receive these colours at your hands. In the name of the Connaught Rangers I thank your Royal Highness for the honour you have conferred on us. The glories of that past to which your Royal Highness has made allusion are vivid in our minds, and we long to emulate the brave deeds of those who so nobly upheld the honour of our corps, and bore its colours in the forefront. Be assured, your Royal Highness, that whenever we may be called to fight the battle of our Queen and country's cause, the recollection of this occasion will serve to add strength to our hearts; and the memory of your Royal Highness in our midst to-day, gracing this scene with your presence, will live in the hearts of the soldiers of the Connaught Rangers."

Home News.

COUNCIL DRAFTS FOR INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 45,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on March 11 at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were:—In bills—on Calcutta, Rs. 25,49,000, average rate 1s. 68d.; on Bombay, Rs. 19,21,000, average rate 1s. 68d.; and on Madras, Rs. 30,000, average rate 1s. 68½d.; in telegraphic transfers—on Calcutta, Rs. 12,50,000, average rate 1s. 68½d.; and on Bombay, Rs. 9,50,000, average rate 1s. 68½d.—making a total of Rs. 67,00,000. Tenders for bills on all Presidencies at 1s. 62½-32d. will receive about 63 per cent., and above in full; and for telegraphic transfers on Calcutta and Bombay at 1s. 63½-50 per cent., and above in full. Subsequently one lakh of transfers on Calcutta was sold at 1s. 615-16d. Between April 1 and the 10th inst. inclusive the India Council sold remittances for Rs. 15,44,41,118, realising £12,453,260. To the corresponding date last year, Rs. 19,57,76,669, realising £15,929,437, had been disposed of.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN INDIA.—On Friday night, at the Society of Arts, Mr. Matthew Arnold, C.S.I., presiding, Mancherjee M. Bhownaggee, late Secretary of the Alexandra Girls' English Institution, Bombay, read a paper on "The present condition and future prospects of Female Education in India." The chairman, in moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Bhownaggee for his paper, said he was of opinion that there could be no doubt that female education in India required State aid. Speaking with great deference and diffidence in the presence of many who knew India very well, he remarked that when outsiders in England heard of female education in India they were apt to think of zenana education. The word zenana to his mind at once raised the thought of that fatal system of polygamy and of the sequestration and seclusion of women which prevailed among the wealthier classes of India, as in Turkey; and he was disposed to say, "Do not make the zenana of too much consequence." Let them not, in what they did for education, fix their attention too much upon the zenana, but treat it rather as a thing that would pass away, and throw themselves as much as possible, in instituting schools and founding education, upon the people—upon those laborious masses among whom, for obvious and natural reasons, polygamy was unknown, and to whose advance and example they must look for the extirpation, both in Turkey and India, of polygamy. It was of great importance that the vernacular languages should be studied by European women who were to deal with education in India, as it was of great importance also—as the founder of the Alexandra Girls' English Institution evidently thought—that those whose education was conducted in those Indian schools should study the English language and literature. Mr. Bhownaggee was himself an example of the success with which the natives of India could study the English language.

INDIAN REFORM ASSOCIATION.—At a meeting of the Indian Reform Association, held on Wednesday last, Dr. Clarke presiding, a motion was proposed by Mr. Alfred Haggard, of the Bengal Civil Service, seconded by Mr. Martin Wood, and adopted, expressing regret at the unconstitutional action of the Government in despatching native troops from India without the consent of Parliament having been obtained, and protesting against the expense of the Indian contingent being defrayed from the Indian revenues.

H.M.S. "JUMNA."—The Indian troopship Jumna left Portsmouth on Thursday last for India with the following drafts:—155 men for the 2nd South Yorkshire Regiment; Capt. Baker and 111 men for the 2nd Royal Lancaster Regiment; Lieut. Jeffreys and 74 men for the 2nd Wiltshire Regiment; Major Stevenson and 37 men for the 2nd Royal Scots Fusiliers; Capt. Steele, Lieuts. Young and Chitty, and 80 men for the 2nd East Yorkshire Regiment; 108 men of the 2nd North Staffordshire Regiment; and Lieut. Molesworth, and 88 men for the 2nd Royal Irish Regiment. The following officers also took passage to Bombay:—Capt. Nicholson and Lieuts. Du Mourier and Heyworth, 2nd Royal Fusiliers; Capt. Maunsell, 1st Durham; Capt. Barclay, 2nd Bedford; Lieuts. Dundee, Brownrigg, and Haggitt, R.E.; Lieut.-Colonel Budgen, Major Maclean, Capt. Bailward, and Lieuts. Barlow, Flood, and Dowell, R.A.; Lieut. Glasgow, 2nd West Surrey; Lieut. Poole, 2nd Liverpool; Lieuts. Jones and Boisvagen, 2nd Norfolk; Lieut. Vanrenen, 2nd Lincolnshire; Lieuts. Fowke, 2nd Devonshire; Lieut. Kellie, 2nd Cheshire; Lieuts. Trevor, Muspratt, and Youngusband, 2nd West Yorkshire; Lieut. Ormsby, 1st East Yorkshire; Lieuts. Goldie, Lye, Mactier, and Oswald, 2nd Hampshire; Lieut. Spencer, 1st Oxford Light Infantry; Lieut. Roy, 2nd Derbyshire; Lieut. Williams, 2nd Middlesex; Lieuts. Moore and Congreve, 1st Connaught Rangers; Surgeons Train, Bown, Leslie, Meekye, and Price, Bengal Medical Department; Surgeon-Major Davie, and Surgeons O'Connell and Durant, Medical Staff; Lieut. Harrison, 2nd Dorsetshire; Major Moffat, 2nd South Wales Borderers; Lieut. Mellis, 1st Worcestershire; Lieut. Stainforth, 2nd Dorset; the Rev. Mr. O'Sullivan; Lieut. Rawlinson, 2nd Lincolnshire; Lieut. Shipley, 10th Bengal Lancers; Lieut. Elliott, R.A.; Lieut. Atkinson, Madras Staff; Lieut. Boswell, Bengal Staff; Lieut. Lowdon, 2nd Leicestershire; Capt. Balfe, Bombay Staff; and Lieut. Thompson, 1st Bombay Lancers; Lieut. Ward, 1st Rifle Brigade; and Lieut. Currie, Madras Staff, had not arrived when the ship left. The total embarkation included 62 officers, 662 rank and file, 22 women, and 23 children.

NOTICES, DIVIDENDS, MEETINGS, &c.

THE NIZAM'S GUARANTEED STATE RAILWAYS COMPANY (LIMITED).—An ordinary general meeting of the members of this company was held on Tuesday last at the City Terminus Hotel. Sir John Strachey, G.C.S.I., presided, and, in moving the adoption of the report, observed that, though everything connected with the practical business of the company had gone on in a satisfactory manner, the shares of the company had not risen to a price with which the proprietors could be expected to be satisfied. They would remember that when the company was started special circumstances occurred which really had no connection whatever with the merits of the undertaking, but which had the effect of temporarily depreciating the shares. In ordinary circumstances it might, he believed, be confidently stated that before this that depreciation would have been recovered, but unfortunately ever since the country had been passing through a period of serious commercial depression. Economical and political causes had combined to check investment even in the most promising undertakings, and to throw doubt and uncertainty into all the operations of trade. Railways especially had suffered. After referring to the loyalty to the British Crown of the Nizam's States and to the scrupulous manner in which His Highness had fulfilled all his financial engagements, the chairman alluded to the work which had been done since the last meeting. The final payment for the concession was made on the 5th September, and under the terms of the agreement £200,000 was retained to form a special fund for the guarantee of the interest. Having announced with gratification that Lord Lawrence had accepted the trusteeship on behalf of the company, he stated that in order to provide the funds for going on with the actual construction of the lines the recent call, which was due on the 8th proximo, had been made. After that there would only remain £5 a share to be called up, but he could not at that moment say when that would be likely to be required. The new surveys for 211 miles from Hyderabad towards the British frontier were proceeding. The plans and estimates for the first 83 miles had been sanctioned by the Government, and the works were now rapidly going on. It was hoped that in about a year from now that section of the line would be completed. From the 1st of January the line was transferred by the Nizam's Government to the company, and the Government of India were now working the line for the company, but as soon as the details could be conveniently arranged the company would take the management into their own hands. With regard to the probable cost of the new lines, the fresh estimates of Mr. Furnivall, based on his new surveys, were well within the original calculation of an average of £6,000 a mile. As to the first section, the arrangements for the supply of the permanent way for the whole of the 83 miles were virtually completed, and the contracts showed that the permanent way would all be delivered at Hyderabad at about 22 per cent. below the estimate. As to the earthworks and other work in India itself, arrangements had been made in India by a local contract, and according to their last information the work was approaching completion. They hoped soon to complete arrangements for a further portion of about 71 miles beyond Warangal, including the very important branch to the Singareni coalfields, and for working those coalfields it was believed that arrangements were on the point of completion between an English company and the Nizam's Government. The scientific and practical officers of the Government had said that their estimates had been framed with what they themselves termed "an excess of caution," and they declared their belief that when this company's system was completed nearly 2,700 miles of railway would derive their coal from Singareni, and that some 184,000 tons of coal per annum would be actually carried over their lines. They would also see what the Government of India had said about the prospects of through traffic on the company's lines. Mr. A. R. Scoble, Q.C., seconded the motion. Dr. Thornton, C.S.I., stated that, having been Foreign Secretary to the Government of India, he knew the resources of Hyderabad, and could entirely indorse every word that the chairman had said on the subject. The resolution having been unanimously adopted, some discussion followed on a motion for the appointment of Mr. G. Van der Linde as a second auditor, but it was ultimately decided to defer the question until the next meeting.

THE INSTITUTE OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—On Thursday next, at eight p.m., Sir Charles A. Hartley, K.C.M.G., M.Inst.C.E., will deliver a lecture on "Inland Navigations."

AGRA BANK.—According to the report of the Agra Bank, Limited, the accounts for the past year show an available balance of £73,319. From this the directors propose to pay a further dividend of 3 per cent, making, with the previous payment, 5½ per cent. for the year. The sum of £10,000 is to be added to the reserve fund, which will then stand at £220,000, and a balance of £8,319 remains to be carried forward.

ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION.—The official liquidator is about to circulate amongst the creditors of the bank a memorandum suggesting that they may probably obtain 17s. in the pound at an early date, if they signify their wish for a settlement on that basis. It is stated that later information rather tends to diminish the probable total of claims, which is put down at £7,200,000, and the proceeds from certain assets in Ceylon, South Africa, &c., estimated at £1,060,000, are said to be doubtful.

OBITUARY.

MAJOR-GENERAL GOODSON ADYE, of Siddlewood, Milverton, near Leamington, late of the Madras Staff Corps, died on the 2nd inst. at St. Leonard's-on-Sea. He entered the Indian Army in 1844, obtained a lieutenancy in 1847, and was employed in suppressing the insurrection in the Parlah Kimed district in 1856-7 and during the rebellion in Shorapore in 1857-8. He was also present at the repulse of the night attack and sortie on the camp of the Hyderabad Contingent in front of Shorapore, and also at the capture of the city, in February, 1858. He was promoted to a captaincy in 1859, became major in 1864, lieutenant-colonel in 1870, colonel in 1875, and major-general in 1878.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18, 1885.

HOW THEY RUSHED THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.—AN APPEAL TO THE PARLIAMENT AND PEOPLE OF ENGLAND.

A CALCUTTA telegram of Saturday that has been widely circulated purports to give the substance of some remarks on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, said to have been offered by the Viceroy on the occasion of the adjournment of the Legislative Council for the Simla exodus. It is stated that—

The Viceroy emphatically denied the statement circulated in England that the Tenancy Bill had been rushed through with indecent haste in order that he himself and Members of the Council might hurry off to Simla; and, further, that the Bill had been forced through by the dead weight of the official majority. Lord Dufferin also referred to the mischief arising from English Members of Parliament bringing forward motions or questions founded upon inaccurate statements forwarded to London by interested parties.

The reference clearly is to the telegraphic appeal forwarded to this country, and brought under the notice of both Houses of Parliament by the Maharajah of Darbhanga as one of the Presidents of the Indian Constitutional Association. But it is almost incredible that the Viceroy should have spoken of the Maharajah as an "interested party." It is, of course, true that the Maharajah in his private capacity must be "interested" in a Land Act, because he is a landholder. But so is each one of the other Presidents of the Association—the Maharajah of Hutwa, the Maharajah of Doomraon, and the Prince Furrokh Shah. So are nearly all the Vice-Presidents and Members of Council of the Association; for its organisation has now been joined by all the leaders of native society in Bengal. Nearly every native in Bengal—everyone who really knows where the shoe pinches in regard to this Act—is either a zemindar or a ryot, and may, in that sense, be called an "interested party." But surely Lord Dufferin would not wish to prohibit all appeal to Parliament from the unrepresented millions of Bengal?

Fortunately, however, one of the Vice-Presidents of the Association is an English gentleman, the Hon. A. B. Miller, member of the Legislative Council of Bengal, whose name will be honourably known to any person who has been in Bengal at any time during the last ten years at least. Mr. Miller is, to the best of our belief, no more "interested" in the Bill—in the sense of pecuniarily interested—than the Viceroy himself is; and as Vice-President of the Association he now comes forward to substantiate, in the most emphatic terms, the statements made by the Maharajah of Darbhanga. He has addressed the following telegram to the Branch Association in London, and to those Peers and Members of Parliament who have with so much generosity and public spirit taken up this very hard case of oppressive legislation:—

The Tenancy Bill passed on Wednesday, despite the strong protest of the English and Native Press. In such a grave question, affecting the weal and woe of sixty millions of human beings, the conduct of the Government in rushing the Bill through the Council without republication after its reconstruction by Select Committee affords matter for very serious regret, and occasions very severe criticism from both the Native and the English communities. All sections of the landed classes, both tenants and landlords, are writhing under the sense of a deep personal injury in consequence of the Government action in refusing delay and republication of the newly-constructed Bill. The measure causes profound public dissatisfaction. Many even of the Government servants expressed disapproval of various provisions of the Act. The Viceroy has challenged the telegraphed explanation (given by the Maharajah of Darbhanga) of the motive of Government for rushing the Bill; but this surely was the logical deduction from the statement of Sir Steuart Bayley, the member in charge of the Bill, that the three weeks delay asked for meant one year's delay—thereby showing conclusively that Government would not consent to delay its departure for Simla even for three weeks! Out of a Council of twenty, fourteen who are Government officials are morally, if not theoretically, compelled to vote in accordance with the wishes and views of the Government—their technical division into "ordinary" and "additional" is irrelevant and misleading. Of the remaining six, two only (the Maharajah of Darbhanga and the Hon. Peary Mohun Mookerjee) are interested in the land of Bengal and Behar. Out of eleven members in Select Committee, six (not two) were Government servants—namely, the Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Steuart Bayley, Messrs. Quinton, Reynolds, Ilbert, and Hunter. Convincing proof of the unwisdom of Government action lies in the admitted fact that all classes on whose behalf Government is presumed theoretically to be legislating are bitterly and universally opposed to the Act. This ill-advised measure will have most disastrous effect, especially at the present time of acute political tension, upon the relations between the Government and the landed classes, the most important factor in the maintenance of English rule in India. Two Land Bills, supplementary to the Bengal Tenancy Act, have already been introduced into the Bengal Council. The landed classes view the threatened legislation with utter dismay. The Bengal Council consists of thirteen members, of whom four only are non-officials. It is to be earnestly hoped, in the interest of the whole community, that the Secretary of State will arrest the widespread feeling of indignation by promptly vetoing the Bill.

The immense importance of this telegram—coming from a man in the position and with the authority of Mr. Miller, and confirming to the letter every one of the statements of the Maharajah of Darbhanga and the other leaders of the Native community of Bengal, on which we regret to see that doubt has been thrown by the Government—will be apparent to every Anglo-Indian reader, and, we trust, by many English readers also. Read together with the telegram from the head of the Native community of Calcutta, the Maharajah Narendra Krishna, published by the Standard on Monday, which were produce elsewhere, it forms an indictment of the action of the Government that is simply crushing. And it is impossible to exaggerate the bitterness of the resentment with which all classes in Bengal will read of the levity with which Mr. Cross on Monday night, in the House of Commons, treated a question in which—in the words of the Maharajah Sir Jotindro Mohun Tagore, K.C.S.I.—"their rights, their social position, nay, their very means of living are at stake." There appears to have been a misprint in Sir Herbert Maxwell's question; and on this ground, forsooth, Mr. Cross had the temerity—and, we will add, the heartless indifference to the feelings and susceptibilities of the millions whom his office permits him to insult with impunity—to turn the whole subject into ridicule!

We venture to express an earnest hope that our many readers who take a keen interest in this subject, and in the maintenance inviolate of British faith toward the Natives of India, will aid us in bringing these most important telegrams of Mr. Miller and the Maharajah Narendra Krishna to the knowledge of every member of the Imperial Legislature. If every reader will cut out these articles, and send them with a private letter to any member of either House with whom he may be acquainted, we believe that such a feeling of scorn for the dishonest policy of the Government would be aroused, as would, even at this eleventh hour, induce Her Majesty's Ministers to withhold their sanction from the Act.

THE MAHARAJAH OF DARBHANGA'S SPEECH IN THE DEBATE ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

We have received by telegram from Calcutta the following report of the speech of the Hon. the Maharajah of Durbhanga, the chief representative of the native community of India in the Viceroy's Council, which was delivered on the occasion of the debate on the Bengal Tenancy Bill last week. His Highness said:—

I regret that I cannot support the motion of the hon. member that the Bill should be taken into consideration. In my opinion it is not submitted to the Council in a form in which we can reasonably be asked to consider it. It comes before us disapproved and discredited by all parties. The ryots are as much opposed to it as the zemindars, and are we, who are legislating in the interests of the zemindars and the ryots, altogether to disregard their wishes and their opinions? Is there a single ryot or a single zemindar in the country who desires that this Bill should be passed? And if it is an undoubted and an undisputed fact that neither zemindars nor ryots desire this measure will this Council be justified in forcing it upon them? Are we to suppose that zemindars and ryots are alike ignorant of their true interests? Surely they may be trusted to know whether a law will injuriously affect them or not. But if we are to disregard the expressed wishes of the parties who will be affected by the proposed legislation, upon whose opinion is the Council to rely? Are we to rely on the Select Committee? Only three members of the Select Committee have signed the report. All the other members have on most important particulars dissented from the report. The report, therefore, and the Bill which has been drafted in accordance with the report, is practically the report and bill of three members only, and two out of the three hon. members have no practical experience of Bengal. The Bill, therefore, comes before us discredited and disowned by the majority of the Select Committee itself. If the Select Committee had been unanimous in their recommendation some sort of justification might have been found for proceeding further with a measure which has been so universally condemned. But with this great divergence of opinion among the members of the Select Committee there seems to me no other alternative but to withdraw the Bill. It cannot be expected that the members of this Council can accept the report of the Select Committee as an authoritative document. If the members of the Select Committee are not themselves agreed as to the principles of the Bill, is it reasonable to expect that this Council should act upon this recommendation? If the Bill in its present shape is proceeded with all the questions which engaged the attention of the Select Committee will necessarily be reopened in this council, and every hon. member will have to form his independent opinion upon them. But here an initial difficulty presents itself. There is absolutely no trustworthy information upon which you can proceed. The Select Committee had no evidence before them; they acted upon official opinions which were generally conflicting and often misleading. My hon. friend, Mr. Hunter, has well described in his dissent the difficulty in which the Select Committee was placed.

The Select Committee, he writes, has been asked to deal with the entire relation of landlords and tenant in Bengal without being furnished with any body of cross-examined evidence to guide its deliberation. Opinions and statements often conflicting, and sometimes contradictory, have been furnished to it in large numbers, but it has not had the means of ascertaining which of these opinions and statements would have borne the test of cross-examination, or how far these discrepancies might have been reconciled. The absence of that data is the more to be regretted in a measure affecting land right in Bengal; for in Bengal, almost alone among the provinces of India, there is no central department of statistics which might in some measure have compensated for the evidence of witnesses heard in the districts. The result has been to leave, in my mind, an extreme uncertainty in regard to several important classes of rights with which the Bill deals. Is this Bill, then, my lord, ripe for discussion? Are we to legislate in uncertainty? Are we to pass a measure which will revolutionise and disorganise the whole rural economy of the country without having any trustworthy data before us? From the very first the zemindars have demanded an inquiry. They deny the facts and the assumptions upon which the Government of Bengal has proceeded. I will give one or two illustrations. The justification of the occupancy clauses in the Bill was based upon the fact that the zemindars of Behar were in the habit of shifting their ryots to prevent the accrual of occupancy rights. This fact, in their memorial to the Secretary of State, the zemindars of Behar emphatically denied. From my own experience, I can confirm this denial. I can state, as a fact, that such a custom is not prevalent in Behar, and that I have never even heard of its existence. And yet the whole of the legislation, with regard to these occupancy rights, has proceeded on an assumption which is absolutely baseless. Another charge made against the zemindars of Behar was that they rackrented their ryots, that rents were so excessive that the ryots were left without a reasonable margin for subsistence. In their memorial to the Secretary of State the zemindars of Behar conclusively, as I think, showed that the charge was baseless. But the restrictions on enhancement have been mainly introduced into the Bill on the assumption that the charge is true. Is this fair upon the zemindars? Have they not a right to ask that their rights shall not be taken away on mere assumptions? Have they not a right to demand that the charges brought against them shall be sifted and examined before the Legislature is invoked against them? But the Bill itself contains the best commentary on this charge. Those ryots who are supposed to be so ground down and oppressed are allowed to demand from their under-ryots 50 per cent. more than they themselves pay. You are asked to restrict the demand of the zemindar upon the ryot, and at the same time to allow the same ryot to demand for the same land 50 per cent. more than he pays himself. Can any inconsistency be greater? I have merely given these illustrations by way of example, to show that we are legislating in the dark. The foundations of the Bill rest upon facts which are alleged and denied, and, upon assumptions which are challenged as untrue. We have no ascertained facts before us upon which we can possibly proceed. There is assertion on the one side, and denial on the other, and the truth is as yet to be ascertained. If this is a correct description of the position in which we stand, is it possible to proceed with the Bill? How are we to decide between conflicting assertions? We may repeat in this Council the interminable discussions of the Select Committee, but in the absence of ascertained facts we shall not be able to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion. To me it seems amazing that we should be considering the matter at all. Among the many millions of people who will be affected by the Bill not a single voice has been raised in its favour. If it is passed, for whose benefit will it be passed? It surely cannot be wise to pass a Bill which will benefit no one and irritate every one. I look upon the Bill as disastrous in every point of view. It will be disastrous in a political point of view, because it will be regarded as a flagrant breach of the Permanent Settlement, and will therefore shake the confidence of the landed proprietors in the Government. It will be disastrous to the zemindars, because it will not only deprive them of their rights, but will render zemindari management for the future absolutely impossible. It will be disastrous to the ryots, because it will give rise to endless disputes, and lead to interminable litigation. For those reasons

I am strongly of opinion that the Bill should be withdrawn, and that any measure which may hereafter be proposed should be drawn up on the lines of the present law, instead of sweeping away existing landmarks, and disorganising the whole fabric of rural society. I shall therefore vote against the motion that the Bill be taken into consideration.

PRODUCE MARKETS.

INDIAN TEA.—Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson report as follows on the Tea Market, from Feb. 26 to March 12 :—Upwards of 35,000 packages have been catalogued for sale since Feb. 26, including 1,400 packages from Ceylon and 800 packages of reprinted tea. At the early sales last week the tone was good, without any change in values, but later on there was strong demand at hardening rates for tea under 1s., while for finer grades the inquiry slackened and sales were made at lower quotations. This week's auctions opened with active competition at $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 1d. advance on most low-priced teas, and closing quotations show the full improvement ; there has also been good bidding for the finer qualities, but rates are irregular, some sales showing 2d. to 8d. advance, while others are not up to the best prices of last month. The China market has been moved in a similar manner since the 5th instant, and a good business, partly speculative, has taken place at $\frac{3}{4}$ d. to 1d. advance upon Congous under 8d. per lb. These sudden movements have been to a great extent caused by the apprehension that the duty may be raised, which has led to operations in the lowest priced teas and to duty payments in advance ; but they are also warranted by the strong statistical position, and the comparatively moderate prices at which all but the finest teas are still quoted. The stock of China Congou, it is estimated, will fall to under the equivalent of two-and-a-half months' consumption before the new season's teas arrive. The increase in the Indian crop, upon which the buyers have been counting, will not be realised, but, on the contrary, the supply will be from 3 to 4 millions short of the year's consumption. At the present time the visible supply of Indian is $1\frac{1}{2}$ million lbs. less than last year, and the heavy clearances now in progress will place the figures in a much stronger position at the end of March ; while not until September will imports leave any margin between receipt and delivery. The policy of buying from hand to mouth, leaving the onus of holding stocks to others—which has been successfully pursued by many wholesale and retail dealers during a long period of over supply, forced sales, and drooping markets—has probably largely reduced the "invisible supplies," the reserve stocks held by distributors, as compared with what used to be held in former years, and has undoubtedly lessened their power of resistance to a rising market (such as was shown in 1879-80) ; the result of which is to make the market sensitive when any substantial ground for a movement exists. Upon the other hand, past experience teaches us, that periods of excitement before the Budget are followed by more or less quietness and depression after—and we have yet to learn to what extent an increase in the duty would disarrange the course of business and check consumption. The suggested increase in the Chinese inland duties variously reported as from $\frac{3}{4}$ d. to $1\frac{1}{4}$ d. per lb. may have an important influence upon the future of Indian and Ceylon Tea. The balance of the current crop remaining to be sold is about 45,000 packages less than at this time last year. Shipments from Calcutta to end of February were 60 million lbs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 24, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, March 6th; Madras and Allahabad, March 4th; Calcutta, March 3rd; Burma, February 27th.

WE are rejoiced to be able to announce that the Secretary of State, in reply to Lord Wemyss, has now definitely stated, from his place in the House of Lords, that there is no intention of any action being taken on the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Bill—that is, of course, in the way of according Her Majesty's sanction to that ill-starred measure—until the memorials on the subject have been received and considered by Her Majesty's Government.

WE have little doubt that the result of this respite and further consideration will be, that the Secretary of State in Council will veto the measure. In fact, as we show in our leading columns to-day, no other result can ensue, if the present Secretary of State has that regard—which we believe he has—for the solemnly recorded opinions of his predecessor, Lord Hartington. For it is now quite clear that the directions of Lord Hartington have been distinctly overlooked, in the alterations subsequently made in the Bill.

FOR this happy result, the Native community of Bengal have primarily to thank the courage and promptitude of their own leaders, the Maharajah of Darbhanga and the Maharajah Narendra Krishna—rendered effective by the public spirit of Lord Wemyss and Sir Herbert Maxwell in this country. The telegram, too, of the Hon. A. B. Miller, which we published last week, has doubtless had much weight in inducing the Government to make this wise and timely concession to universal public opinion; as well as the resolutions of the London Defence Committee, which we give in another place.

It is stated—and we think the statement likely to be founded on fact—that Lord Dufferin has given his willing and cordial assent to the concession now made by the Government. The happiest auguries for the success of his Excellency, in the various great and weighty matters now demanding his attention in other parts of the Empire, may be founded on this, which we hope may prove to be the preliminary step towards a satisfactory settlement of the Bengal land question.

It has long been a trite saying that the Empire is to be congratulated on the fact that, at this critical moment in its fortunes, we have a man like Lord Dufferin at the helm in India; and that he is understood to possess the entire confidence of the Home Ministry. The consequence is, that everywhere we see the manifestations of a wise and vigorous statesmanship, attended (as it always will be) by the enthusiastic loyalty of all classes and communities in India, both Native and English. We have no hesitation in saying that the events of the past two or three weeks have marked an immense advance towards the attainment of that dearest object of the Indian and Anglo-Indian patriot, the welding together of the interests and sympathies of the Indian and English races. The spontaneous outburst of loyalty, not only from the princes but also from the peoples of India, and not only from territories under our own direct rule, but also from those of our great feudatories—offered at a moment when the circumstances of the time render it valuable in itself, and afford the best possible test of its sincerity—will do more for the future solidarity of the Empire, and for the establishment of the heartiest feelings of kindness and brotherhood between the two races, than thousands of speeches and professions at less trying times. Let us all agree henceforward to dwell on these great and gratifying realities, rather than on petty and trumpery—because, happily ephemeral—points of difference, whenever such may arise.

WE trust the fullest recognition of the Government will be accorded to the loyal offers of their Highnesses the Maharajahs Sindiah and Holkar, as of the other great Chiefs who have offered us military aid; and we hope that aid will be heartily accepted in the spirit in which it is offered.

LORD DUFFERIN's military preparations for the crisis that is on us—his arrangements for the approaching interview with the Ameer of Kabul—and the other measures of the Government of India now announced, seem to leave nothing to be desired, so far as India itself is concerned. We can only hope and pray that the same spirit may animate the Councils of Downing Street—always the vulnerable point, the Indian "heel of Achilles."

FOR this not the faintest symptom of wavering must be shown in regard to the absolute and unquestionable claim of the Afghans to such positions as Penjdeh and Pul-i-Khisti, and the territory generally south of that line which was definitely indicated in the preliminary negotiations between the English and Russian Governments. Let us hear no sound of these positions being "debated or debatable." Everyone in England, in India, in Afghanistan, or elsewhere, who has at all followed the history of this question, knows full well that nothing but the amazing effrontery of the Russian officers—or the still more amazing credulity of the Pall Mall Gazette and the other dupes of Madame de Novikoff in this country—could pretend for one moment that there could be any question whatever about the ownership of these places.

AND, such being the case, it is obvious that the slightest sign of hesitation on our part would be regarded by the Afghans—most naturally and most justly—as a gross and cowardly betrayal of their vital interests. We deeply regret that Mr. Gladstone should have entertained, even for a day, the proposition that the Russian status quo should be maintained, pending the further diplomacy. We shall be compelled, sooner or later, to turn the Russians out of Pul-i-Khisti; and if we do it sooner, rather than later, we shall have all the advantage of the co-operation and the entire confidence of the Afghans.

WE believe that the withdrawal, by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, of his application to resign his command—which withdrawal has been sanctioned, possibly with the design of allowing his Royal Highness to go to the front—will be exceedingly popular with our Indian fellow-subjects, and will command the approval of all. The personal bravery of our Royal House has ever been conspicuous; and has, indeed, never been questioned even by the vilest detractors of the monarchy in England.

The meeting of the editors of the Madras vernacular papers, and the sensible and loyal tone of the resolutions passed thereat, are most gratifying signs of the times, which we regard as of the highest importance. We trust and believe that our contemporaries in Bengal, Bombay, and Northern India will not be slow to follow the admirable example set them in the South.

“Shall Russia have Penjdeh?” is the title of the latest brochure from the pen of Mr. Charles Marvin, who is, without doubt, the authority on Central Asian questions. Messrs. Allen are the publishers.

To the subscribers who have written to us on the subject, we beg to state that we contemplate making extensive alterations on our commercial page in the next issue.

Says the Standard :—

Fortune has not been favourable to this country lately, and the best of possible Ministries have certainly had luck dead against them. In one respect, however, something like a direct interposition of Providence has been shown in our behalf, and we have reason to be thankful indeed that the present crisis in India finds us with a Lord Dufferin instead of a Lord Ripon at the helm. The energy which is being shown in our great Dependency, to meet the possible storm, is satisfactory in the extreme. Twenty-five thousand men are to be collected at Quetta, and preparations are being made for placing another fifty thousand in the field if necessary. The same spirit of energy appears to animate the whole populations, Mahometans and Hindoos. Two princes have placed their forces at the disposal of the Government, and it is very gratifying to see that Scindia, the most powerful—and, it may be said, at one time the most doubted—has been most foremost among those who have offered their services. With such a spirit as this prevailing, England need feel no uneasiness as to the result of the struggle, whenever it may come. England and India united are far more than a match for Russia upon the northern frontier of our Dependency; for it is only by disaffection and treachery in India that Russia can ever hope to obtain success.

THE Englishman has the following account of the Calcutta Freight Market, corrected to March 3:—

There has been very much less demand for steamer tonnage since our last report, and rates show a declining tendency for March shipment. For sailers there is even less cargo offering than for steamers, and for early shipment very little cargo indeed is obtainable. Our unfixed tonnage remains small, and does not exceed 11,000 tons, but there are many vessels overdue.

THE FERGUSSON COLLEGE.—The scene at the laying of the foundation-stone of the Fergusson College on the 5th inst. was a most animated one. A triumphal arch extended across the road with "Welcome to Sir James Fergusson" in white letters on a red ground. Just before his Excellency arrived a section of the raised seats, filled with school children, gave way. Fortunately, nobody was hurt. Professor Bhandarker invited his Excellency to lay the foundation-stone, which he did. After the ceremony his Excellency made a speech, in the course of which he dwelt upon the importance of the new college as being a spontaneous movement of the leaders of native society, who had not asked Government to help them until the movement was well afloat. He said that he trusted the policy of those who followed him would be for the advancement of education. He also spoke of the modesty of the promoters, especially of the late Vishnool Chiploonkar. He said that the site in the midst of historical Poona was in every way suitable. The ground given by Government was valued at Rs.10,000, and the Farakhana at Rs.30,000. He also spoke in warm terms of the generosity of the Princes of the Deccan, and added that the success of the college was due in a measure to the exertions of Mr. Moore, the Collector. Professor Selby returned thanks.

THE POONA HIGH SCHOOL FOR NATIVE GIRLS.—The foundation-stone of the Poona High School for Native Girls was laid on March 4 by his Excellency the Governor, in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. The stone was a large block of Deccan trap, the inscription being engraved on a slab of white marble. The site of the school, in Sadashew Peth, has been liberally presented by the Chief of Sangli. Among those present were Major Mansell, Mr. and Mrs. Kirkham, Colonel Ducat, Mr. and Miss Plunkett, Professor Theodore Cook, Mrs. Walker, Mr. E. P. Robertson, Major Babington, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob, and Colonel Latouche. The Chiefs of Sangli and Phaltan were present on the dais. His Excellency was received at the main entrance by the school committee, and escorted to his place on the dais, when the girls of the school sang some appropriate verses in Marathi, specially written for the occasion. Rao Bahadur Dandekar then read a long address descriptive of the progress made by the school, and its future prospects. In the course of the address it was mentioned that over one lakh of rupees had been subscribed. The committee requested Government to grant two-thirds of the cost of the building, and to permit the committee to supervise its construction, both of which requests were, his Excellency subsequently stated, granted by the Government. The Chief of Sangli then invited his Excellency to lay the foundation-stone, the Chief of Phaltan seconding the proposal, and also intimating his intention of giving a sum of two thousand rupees to be spent in laying out a public garden in commemoration of his Excellency's term of office. The stone having been declared well and truly laid, his Excellency returned to the dais, and spoke at some length on the advantages of education for native families. In the course of his speech he said it was beyond the province of the Government to interfere with the social customs of the natives, but that the reform would come about in good time. Flowers, attar, and pan were then distributed, and the proceedings brought to a close with the singing of the National Anthem in Marathi and English.

Telegraphic Intelligence.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent at Calcutta, dated March 22:—

"The Budget has been the event of the week, but an event which attracted but little interest, public attention being almost exclusively fixed on foreign politics. Moreover, Sir Auckland Colvin's Minute contained no surprises, and there was nothing remarkable in it. It is a plain business-like review of the financial situation, and is largely devoted to a consideration of the clauses and probable duration of the present depression in trade. No new taxes are imposed nor old ones remitted. Moreover, the threatening state of the political atmosphere deprives the financial statement of much of the interest which would otherwise attach to it, and it is felt that it is of little use to discuss and criticise calculations which a great war may at any moment upset. The balance of such criticisms as the Minute has evoked is, on the whole, favourable, and it is generally admitted that, notwithstanding depressed trade and the steady fall in the exchange, there is nothing in the financial condition of India to justify the gloomy forebodings of the pessimist school, while the cautious tone which Sir Auckland Colvin maintains throughout shows that he is fully alive to the difficulties which the immediate future may bring.

"The editors of several Madras vernacular papers held a meeting last week for the purpose of urging upon the native Press the necessity of moderation. It was resolved that care should be taken in the use of language in dealing with the Government, that correct information couched in mild language should be laid before the public, and that they should meet monthly to discuss such matters as may be brought before them. The meeting dispersed after expressing hearty thanks for the many invaluable privileges which the Press and the people enjoy under the British Government. This meeting is a hopeful sign. If the entire native Press follows the good example set by Madras, it will soon become a powerful agent for good in India.

"Meerut society entertained the Duke and Duchess of Connaught at a farewell dinner some days ago. The Duke, in replying to the toast of his health, expressed the great pleasure he had derived from his stay in India, which had been among the happiest portions of his life, and the regret he felt in leaving. Since the dinner it would appear that his departure has been indefinitely postponed, as in view of the critical state of affairs in the frontier he applied for leave to withdraw the resignation of his command, and he has been allowed to do so.

"Last November I called attention to the necessity which had arisen for an establishment of detective police for all India, owing to the increasing use which organised bands of robbers were making of the railways and the difficulty which the existing provincial police forces found in checking their operations. Colonel Ewart, of the Punjab Police, has now perfected a scheme for a force composed of well-paid and intelligent men, available for service in any part of India, whose main duty would be to watch the principal lines of communication, and to make themselves acquainted with the chief members of robber gangs. There is plenty of detective talent available among the natives if they were only properly paid. The question is mainly one of finance. As to the necessity of some such scheme there can be no doubt, and, if Colonel Ewart's plan is carried out, it might be usefully supplemented by the appointment of public prosecutors or of legal assistants to the chief police officers throughout the country.

"The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has appointed a Commission to inquire into the condition and pay of the Ministerial establishment of subordinate Courts. This is assuredly a step in the right direction, as the inefficiency of these establishments has long been a scandal.

"The Englishman newspaper mentions an interesting historical discovery lately made in Calcutta. This is the exact site of the monument erected to Holwell, the survivor and annalist of the Black Hole. Special interest attaches to the monument, as it marks the spot where victims were buried. When the search began the Government of Bengal gave a small sum, but that grant was expended, and the work continued at the cost of Doctor Hunter and some other gentlemen. It is proposed to mark the spot with a slab."

"An article in a recent number of the Hongkong Daily Press supplies a strong additional argument in favour of opening the trade between Tibet and India. That paper states that China leaf tea is in considerable demand at Lhasa, that the best quality sells there at two rupees six annas a pound, and an inferior quality at 18 annas. Now, as Lhasa is only three weeks' journey from Darjeeling and the cost of carriage by ponies is small, it is quite certain that if the trade were open Darjeeling planters could sell the best teas at Lhasa at much lower prices and yet make a handsome profit. To secure such a market would be a great gain to the Indian tea industry, and it is to be hoped that the British Government will press upon China the propriety of removing existing restrictions. It would suffice if Indian native traders were allowed free access to Tibet. Indeed, it is probably not advisable to ask for the admission of European traders at present. The first step would be to ask the permission of China to send a mission to Lhasa to treat with the Dalai Lama. If China is not prepared to grant such permission, it would still be something gained if she allowed the Indian Government to send a small mission to Shigatse, to present congratulations on the occasion of the approaching identification of the new Tashu Lama, the time for whose reappearance in the form of a child is now at hand."

"Although last week's telegrams seem to indicate that negotiations with Russia are taking a somewhat more peaceful turn, the interest and excitement with which the Indian public are watching the situation in Central Asia are in no degree diminished. The Ministerial statements in Parliament have caused a general feeling of disappointment, and the fear is freely expressed that the Government will not keep up a bold front, but again commit the blunder of accepting Russian assurances. The general opinion in India is that it is not of the least use to make a fuss about the Russians withdrawing from the debatable land, and that the really important point is that they all this while are reinforcing their troops in the Transcaspian region, and whenever it is convenient for them to break off negotiations they will be in a position to make a rush for Herat.

"But the vacillating spirit which appears to pervade the Cabinet has not affected the Indian Government, and there has not been a moment of relaxation in the military preparations in this country. Orders have been given for 50,000 men to be held in readiness. They are now ready, fully equipped for service, and can be started at any time. The batteries of the Punjab Frontier Force are being increased from four to six guns. The Goorkha regiments are also being largely increased. All military furlough is stopped, and supplies and transport for a large force are being collected at Quetta and other points towards Pishin. Other, although less apparent, preparations are being pushed on rapidly, and the military authorities are confident that, with the arrangements which have been in progress for some time past, they could place a powerful army at Herat long before the Russians could take it.

"India unassisted can probably beat back the Russian attack at Herat, but cannot do more. Anglo-Indians and natives share the belief that to beat back that attack will not be enough. India looks to England to put an end at once and for ever to Russian menace, which has so long been the greatest source of anxiety. The people of England should remember that this is not a crisis to be met, like the Nile expedition, by sending out small bodies of troops unit by unit. They should meet it in the same spirit in which they met the crisis, hardly more serious, of the Mutiny, and should be prepared to send at least 50,000 more European troops to this country at once. England should address Russia in the words of Lord Dalhousie:—"If you will have war, them by God you shall have war." It should be war to the knife all the world over.

"Several Indian newspapers urge that the time has come for the British Government to consider whether an alliance with Germany, Austria, and Turkey, against Russia is possible. But whatever be thought of the possibility of such an arrangement, there is no difference of opinion in this country, that, if Russia selects for war, no peace should be made till she be rendered powerless for further mischief.

"If any doubt has ever been felt regarding the feelings of the natives in the present crisis that doubt no longer exists. It is abundantly clear that their feeling is one of most enthusiastic loyalty. Hindoos and Mahomedans are quite shrewd enough to see that they would gain nothing by Russia's success; and the manner in which all the native princes have put the whole resources of their States at the disposal of the Government shows that they are anxious to be allowed to take their part in the struggle which they foresee must come sooner or later.

"The Ameer left Cabul on the 13th, and arrived at Jellalabad on Wednesday. He was to halt there for two or three days. General Gordon meets him at Ali Musjid, and on crossing the frontier at Jamrood he will be received by troops from Peshawur. He arrives at Rawul Pindi on Friday or Saturday. The Viceroy leaves Calcutta to-morrow. He stays twenty-four hours at Allahabad, and then proceeds direct to Rawal Pindi, where he arrives on Friday. The Commander-in-Chief and the Headquarters Staff leave Calcutta to-night. The Commanders-in-Chief of Madras and Bombay are already en route. The Nawab Mooner-ul-Mulk and other members of the Nizam's deputation left Hyderabad yesterday. The Punjab chiefs will set out in the course of this week.

"The programme of arrangements for the durbar are not yet issued. The Viceroy will hold a levée on Friday evening. He and the Ameer will review the entire force on or about the 1st of April. There will also be races and other amusements during the intervals in the more serious business of political conference."

The following is from the Standard correspondent at Calcutta, dated March 23:—

"I am able to forward you the following details of the military measures which have just been adopted by the Government of India, in view of possible difficulties with Russia respecting the Afghan Frontier.

"In the first place, the Garrison of Quetta will be immediately strengthened by the despatch of an Army Corps. This force will comprise three Divisions of 8,000 men each. In addition, a reserve of 11,000 men will be formed and equipped so as to be ready to march and take the field immediately on receipt of orders.

"The general officers have not been officially announced, but it is practically certain that Sir Frederick Roberts will take the chief command, while Sir Herbert Macpherson and Major-General Prendergast will take charge of two Divisions, and the Duke of Connaught, it is expected, will command the Reserve.

"A general increase in the strength of the Indian Army will be effected without delay. Two hundred men will be added to each Infantry Regiment, and each Cavalry Regiment will be strengthened by an extra squadron.

"The Maharajahs Scindiah and Holkar have both placed the military resources of their respective States at the disposal of the Government in the event of war. As Scindiah has for many years past been drilling the male population of his State on something like scientific principles his forces are not only numerous, but relatively efficient."

THE "MANCHESTER COURIER" ON THE MAHARAJAH OF DARBHANGA'S SPEECH IN COUNCIL.

There is no doubt a marked increase in the interest taken by Englishmen in the domestic affairs of India since the day when Macaulay first denounced the ignorance of the "average school boy," who, according to his critic, was acquainted with the most recondite details in the history of Peru and Mexico, but knew nothing of the great Empire we have founded in the East. But though the improvement is marked there is still ample room for greater attention to Indian politics. The libt Bill justly aroused popular indignation in England, but another measure of even graver import has scarcely arrested public attention in any degree proportionate to its importance. Our readers will have noticed in our parliamentary reports the futile efforts made by Sir H. Maxwell and Lord Wemyss to extort information from the Government upon the manner in which the Bengal Tenancy Bill was being rushed through the Legislative Council at Calcutta. The system of Land Tenure in India is so complex, and the details of the present Bill so elaborate, that it would require an essay to give a complete account of the history of the measure. It may suffice to say that the author of the scheme is the same redoubtable Mr. Ilbert whose notoriety as a doctrinaire Radical was sufficiently established by his connection with the Bill which bears his name. Mutatis mutandis the Bengal Tenancy Bill is a replica of the Irish Land Act. A commission was appointed some years ago to investigate the alleged grievances of the ryots. There was great difference of opinion as to the facts of the case, and the evidence appears to have been collected in a very loose way, their being no opportunities given to cross-examine witnesses. A Bill, however, was the result, which elicited a very strong protest from the Chief Justice of Calcutta. It was referred to a Select Committee, consisting of six Government servants and five others. Only three members of the Committee signed the draft report, all the other members dissenting on important points. "The report, therefore," says the Maharajah of Darbhanga, whose speech in Council is given in Allen's Indian Mail, "and the Bill which has been drafted in accordance with the report is practically the report and Bill of three members only, and two out of the three have no practical experience in Bengal." More than this, the Bill has never been republished since its reconstruction by the Select Committee. The concluding words of the Maharajah's speech are worth reproducing. "To me it seems amazing," he says, "that we should be considering this matter at all. Among the many millions of people who will be affected by the Bill, not a single voice has been raised in its favour. It surely cannot be wise to pass a Bill which will benefit no one and irritate everybody. It will be disastrous in a political point of view, because it will be regarded as a flagrant breach of the Permanent Settlement, and will therefore shake the confidence of the landed proprietors in the Government. It will be disastrous to the zemindars, because it will not only deprive them of their rights, but will render zemindari management for the future impossible. It will be disastrous to the ryots, because it will give rise to endless disputes and lead to interminable litigation." This, of course, is only one side of the case, but it is essential that Parliament should insist upon Government refusing their sanction to the Bill until this side has been destroyed, and the official case fairly made out. At present the Council seems to rely rather upon its official majority than on the strength of its arguments.

THE RUSSIANS AT THE GATES OF HERAT.

At a recent meeting of the Balloon Society at the Aquarium, Westminster, Mr. Charles Marvin delivered a lecture on "The Russians at the Gates of Herat." Sir Henry Tyler, M.P., presided, and there was a very large attendance.

The CHAIRMAN, in introducing the lecturer, said no one was more entitled to speak with authority on matters connected with Central Asia and Afghanistan than Mr. Marvin, who had made a special study of those points which had a particular interest at the present moment. They must all feel that the position on the Afghan frontier was exceedingly critical, and a reckless shot might plunge two continents in a blaze. It was certain that what was wanted was a great deal of firmness on the part of Her Majesty's Government—(hear, hear)—but it was a quality that Ministers had not always displayed. If Candahar were still garrisoned with British troops, it would be much more easy to conduct such operations as might become necessary on the Afghan frontier; while it would render those operations less likely to be needed. The Prime Minister had told them that he had taken the Afghan frontier and Herat under his special protection; but when they remembered past events, that assurance was less satisfactory. He could only hope that the Government would do better in this instance than in the case of the Transvaal and the Soudan—(hear, hear). There was one satisfaction, however, to be derived from the fact that they had a Governor-General of India possessed of sufficient wisdom, firmness, and forbearance to meet the present crisis—(hear, hear). They had among them that evening M. Lessar, and he hoped that gentleman would give them his opinion on the delicate subject before them. If Russia really desired peace and fair dealing, she would join us in the Commission, and withdraw her troops from the positions she had lately occupied—(cheers).

Mr. CHARLES MARVIN, who was warmly received, said:—Ladies and Gentlemen: A crisis, long expected by far-seeing politicians in this country, has suddenly disturbed the unnatural calm of Central Asian affairs. Russia, taking advantage of our embarrassments in Egypt and our complications with Germany and France, has occupied certain districts of Afghanistan, which, on the showing of her own official maps, belong to the Ameer, and by placing her troops alongside the Afghan outposts, has brought about a condition of things which may result in a war at any moment. To judge from the general tone of the English Press, which I have never seen more unanimous than on this momentous occasion, England has decided that if the Afghans are attacked, she will take immediate measures to assist them, and in the meanwhile awaits an answer to her demands—that the points occupied should be evacuated by the Russian troops pending the diplomatic settlement of the dispute. Such an attitude, resolute without being blustering, firm, yet not fanatically unfriendly, is well calculated to exercise a powerful moral check upon Russia, and I trust that nothing will be said this evening by any Englishman present to impair that attitude by creating unfounded impressions that this country is divided as to its rights and its determination to uphold them on the Afghan frontier—(hear, hear).

Briefly speaking, the present situation is the outgrowth of the following circumstances. To pacify the East Caspian region, and establish what Skobeleff aptly described as a place of arms on the Persian frontier, Russia undertook a series of campaigns against the Turcomans, culminating, as you all remember, with the famous siege of Geok Tepé. This stronghold was captured shortly after the battle of Maiwand. Russia then waited until England had announced her intention of evacuating Candahar, when instead of reciprocating Mr. Gladstone's scuttling movement, as, according to the ministerial papers of the time, she had promised to do, she annexed the whole of the territory up to Askabad, and erected a fortress there for 3,000 troops. Still she promised not to occupy Merv; and the Government, in spite of innumerable broken pledges in the past, were so influenced by those assurances that they not only pulled up and scattered the rails of the Candahar railway they are now relaying in such hot haste, but they could hardly be persuaded from evacuating Quetta. Speaking at a banquet at Leeds on the 28th of January last, the Marquis of Ripon said, "So far from scuttling out of Afghanistan, the English withdrew at a time which suited their purpose, and as their troops marched away with steady step, no voice was lifted against them and no dog barked at their heels. Well, what the dogs of Candahar did I am not cognisant of—I never knew they had political opinions before; but if the dogs we on Lord Ripon's side the Russians were not, for General Grodekoff has just revealed in his splendid official history of Skobeleff's siege of Geok Tepé that Skobeleff sent secret agents throughout the bazaars of Central Asia to spread the report that it was Russia who had caused us to evacuate Afghanistan."

Shortly after Skobeleff returned home Mr. Joseph Cowen, M.P., sent me to St. Petersburg to ascertain the views of the principal generals and statesmen with regard to the Central Asian question. I saw every eminent personage who exercised weight in the matter, and the whole of them concurred in the representing to me that that had been set at rest for years. M. de Giers, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, argued with me until it was impolite to contend that Merv was unsafe; and General Skobeleff pooh-poohed the railway which Russia is now pushing on from Kizil Arvat to Sarakhs and Herat, and which it has now been revealed by General Grodekoff he was really the most ardent advocate of all along, on account of the terrific hitting power it would confer upon Russia in the event of our opposing her after we had weakly allowed her to push to the Key of India. A few months later the Egyptian question began to seethe, and Russia, who had always intended to purchase our acquiescence to her annexation of Constantinople by considerably allowing us to take possession of the banks of the Nile, was so mortified at being left unrecouped that she inaugurated in Central Asia what was a revival of the Eastern question; for, as you know, those two questions of Central Asia and the East are inseparably connected with one another, and the little game that is now being played on the banks of the Murghab and Heri Rud simply masks the greater game on which Russia has staked her entire national progress. The reconstruction of the great granite docks at Sebastopol at a cost of a quarter of a million sterling, the construction of four heavy ironclads for the Black Sea fleet at two millions sterling, the recent sanction of new barracks at Sebastopol for 3,000 man-of-war-men, the impending transfer at a million-and-a-quarter sterling of the commercial port from the south to the north side, so as to enable the Government to develop the naval station to the proportions it attained anterior to the Crimean War—these recent heavy items of expenditure, coupled with the addition, during the last two years, of twelve sea-going torpedo steamers to the Black Sea fleet, and the impending addition of two sea-going torpedo rams and ten torpedo cutters are not without extreme significance, and demonstrate that while Russia is taking up a strong position on the Afghan frontier she is also straining every nerve to render herself ready for a war in Europe—(hear, hear).

I may be, perhaps, asked how I can associate the reopening of the Eastern Question in Central Asia with the anger of Russia at our continual presence in Egypt. Easily; you will remember that the annexation of Merv was represented to England by the Russian Government as a spontaneous submission of the tribes, which the Emperor, in such a favourable feeling, might not repeat itself again, had decided to accept. Now this was sheer humbug, and I will tell you how I can prove this. For years I have devoted myself to watching Russia's movements in the East; and as it is known that I have organised a sort of intelligence branch in connection with this subject, it sometimes happens that I am asked to compare information in my possession with that possessed by military authorities. Well, anterior to the occupation of Merv, the garrison of Khiva consisted of the 4th Orenburg Cossacks, the 5th and 13th Turkestan Line Battalions, and the 6th battery of Artillery. This was my list obtained from Russian sources, and I believe it was the list of the authorities in India, derived from Turkestan direct. Shortly after the annexation of Merv, I was reading one day a letter from Khiva in the Moscow Gazette, describing a flood, when I saw a reference to the 17th Line Battalion being among the sufferers. Now, this 17th Line Battalion belonged to the garrison of Samarcand, a month's march at least from Khiva. How therefore had it got to Khiva, and what was it doing there? This was explained in an equally casual manner a few weeks later in the same paper. Writing from Khiva, a Mr. Chursin mentioned the suicide of Lieutenant Bodisco, belonging to the 17th Line Battalion, who had been in a state of deep melancholy from the time—six months previous—the battalion had been sent from Samarcand to Khiva to be despatched to Merv, and who had preferred blowing out his brains to accompanying the troops any further. Here, you will see, was a revelation Russia prepared for the swoop on Merv, six months for the "act of voluntary submission" was consummated, and shifted her forces from one part of Central Asia to another quite unknown to the people of this country. And it may be that while you are comfortably sitting here and the Russian Ambassador is exchanging tête-à-tête with Mr. Gladstone, these dark movements are continuing, and if you leave Herat much longer without a garrison, Russia may take advantage of the feeble forces on the Afghan Frontier to smash Sir Peter Lumsden's party, and burst her way into the Key of India—(hear, hear).

About the time that this 17th Battalion went to Khiva, to remain quiet there until the moment was ripe to throw it into Merv, Russia sent an expedition to the Tejend oasis, lying midway between Askabad and Merv. I drew particular attention to this at the time, whereupon the Journal de St. Petersburg, the official mouthpiece of Russian diplomacy, expressed indignation that I should have called it an "expedition." Said this precious promulgator of mendacity—"The movement in question is only a reconnaissance, and there is a wide distinction between a reconnaissance and an expedition; a reconnaissance goes and returns, an expedition goes and does not return." Well, events have proved the contrary in this instance, for the troops who took part in Colonel Muratoff's reconnaissance on the Tejend are now encamped several hundred miles to the east on Afghan soil. When the military preparations were ready for the swoop on Merv, Lieutenant Alikhanoff proceeded thither to argue the people out of their independence, just as Lessar has come to London to persuade you to give up Penjdeh and the posts on the Huri Rud. This Alikhanoff, a Russianised Mussulman, had had charge of the game at Merv all along. First, in the early days of 1882, he formed at Askabad a caravan, and, preceded by a Russianised Khivan who bought over some of the chiefs, he pushed his way to Merv, disguised as a trader's clerk, and spent a fortnight in the midst of the Turcomans. During this time he got to know who could be bought over, and bought them; while on every possible occasion he pushed about the country, disguised afresh as a Tekké, and took plans of the defences. On his return, Lessar and other explorers surveyed all the roads leading to Merv; then followed the military movements I have referred to, and finally, everything being ready, Alikhanoff one morning suddenly appeared before Merv with a small Cossack escort, and summoned the people to immediate surrender. At this meeting all that Alikhanoff stipulated was that the people should accept the suzerainty of Russia; there was nothing said of annexing the country, in the general acceptance of the term, or of imposing a garrison upon it. Backed up as he was by the pro-Russian party, whose support he had purchased, and able to point to a Russian column three marches off, which he magnified into the advanced guard of a greater army, it was difficult for opposition to be organised against him, and after a hurried discussion, the acceptance of the Russian suzerainty was decided on. When the news of this submission reached St. Petersburg, M. de Giers, who had assured me so solemnly that nothing could tempt Russia to occupy Merv, described the matter to our ambassador as being an affair of altogether insignificant proportions. "The people had spontaneously submitted," he said; "and a Russian official would be sent to govern them, with perhaps a Turcoman escort." In other words, only one Russian was to be sent to Merv. When this assurance is placed against the whole series of annexations and military movements that have taken place since, it is amazing that M. de Giers could have the audacity to expect to be believed, when he keeps on assuring us that Russia has no further designs in the direction of India—(hear, hear).

The people of Merv were cheated and tricked just as Her Majesty's Government. When they found the deputation of submissive chiefs returning from Askabad with a body of Russian troops at its back they saw their independence was gone. A hasty attempt at armed resistance was made, but it was too late. The Russians forced their way into the fortress, and the annexation of the country became an accomplished fact. For his share in this shady transaction Alikhanoff was raised to the rank of major and made Governor of Merv—an encouragement for him and other ambitious frontier officers to persevere in the same path; and on this man very largely depends whether there shall be war between England and Russia. It was he who tried to capture Penjdeh before Sir Peter Lumsden arrived, and who has, within the last few days, pickets within six miles of the place. Now, I ask you, whether, bearing in mind Alikhanoff's antecedents, his well-known hostility to England, and his desire to still further distinguish himself by breaking up Afghanistan as Kaufmann broke up Bokhara, whether you think it be safe to permanently withdraw our English officers—(no, no)—from the frontier, and leave no barrier between him and the key of India, but a few bribable Orientals? So long as Alikhanoff rules at Merv, with outposts pushed to Penjdeh, and Komaroff rules at Askabad, with outposts pushed to Ak Robat—so long, I maintain, must English officers screen Herat from such bold swoops as the annexations of Merv and Old Sarakhs, and more recently of Ak Robat and Pul-i-Khisti. After Merv was won the next move was upon Old Sarakhs, and the English Government, not having resented this with sufficient firmness—you will probably remember Lord Fitzmaurice's flippant reassurances on this subject to the House of Commons last summer—Russia completed her organisation of the new territory and made a fresh advance, this time into Afghan territory, and pushed up to every point leading to Herat which they found unoccupied by the Afghans or Sir Peter Lumsden's party. Simultaneously with this, Russia endeavoured to carry the conflict into our very midst by sending Lessar into London to occasion a split in English public opinion. This was one of the dynamite strokes of policy in which Russia delights. Our two best experts in regard to the contested region, Colonel Patrick Stewart, who stalked Skobelev's army in 1881 disguised as an American horsedeaider, and Mr. Condie Stephen, of the Foreign Office, who visited Sarakhs last year, are both attached to Lumsden's mission on the Afghan frontier. Had Russia sent Lessar thither, with his superior, General Zellnoi, he would at once have found his match in those clever officials. Instead of which Russia wheeled right round, and shot Lessar into London, trusting that he might, with his travelling tales, act on the gullible side of Mr. Gladstone's nature—(cheers and hisses)—and wheedle him out of the gates of Herat, as Alikhanoff had wheedled the people of Merv into surrendering their independence.

And this intrigue, I would point out, is still in progress in London, and has received encouragement from an unexpected quarter. The Pall Mall Gazette, which, having long been the mouthpiece of O. K., or Madame de Novikoff, is now the officious organ of Lessar and the party he is trying to form about him. Let me give you two instances of what I say. The week before last a discussion took place at the meeting of the Westminster Debating Society, at which Lessar and myself were invited to attend. The debate was raised by Captain Griffin Vyse, formerly attached to the English army in South Afghanistan, and who has delivered several lectures of an anti-Russian character, and had placed on the paper an alarmist motion in favour of the immediate occupation of Candahar. But just before the debate opened he came to me and said: "I have been discussing the whole subject with Lessar, and am so impressed by his assurances that I have altogether changed my views." He also mentioned the name of a very important official who had been brought in contact with Lessar and had been won over also. You may think this a small matter, yet it illustrates what is going on in our midst, while our own best experts are far away, and has received a certain amount of importance in Russia. The Novoe Vremya, the Times of Russia, which I received from St. Petersburg this morning, contains a leading article congratulating Lessar on having smashed this debate and converted Captain Griffin Vyse, and trusts to see the growth of an influential pro-Russian party in this country. The second instance is this. An article appeared last week in the Pall Mall Gazette entitled "Is Penjdeh in Afghanistan? By a Russian," evidently emanating from Lessar, and endeavouring to prove by elaborate references to faulty English maps and careless authors that the Ameer had no right to the place. The Russian altogether ignored the correct English official maps which place Penjdeh inside Afghanistan, and, what was more to the point, omitted to state that most of the Russian official maps published previous to last year's swoop upon Merv, assigned the locality to the Ameer. I enclosed a fac-simile sketch of one of these maps, presented to me by General Grodekoff, the chief of Skobelev's staff at Geok Tepé, as having been used by Skobelev during his campaign, in which not only was Penjdeh marked as being in Afghanistan, but also Pulikhatun and Ak Robat; and in one brief, decisive word, every inch of territory now occupied by Russia south of Sarakhs. That, I think you will agree with me, was a fact of national importance. If Skobelev had gone to Merv in 1881, as he was expected to have done, he would have been guided in his movements towards Afghanistan by this very map. Well, ladies and gentlemen, the Pall Mall Gazette, which claims to be the embodiment of patriotism, the Pall Mall Gazette burnt the map and suppressed the letter. So that I think you will agree with me that there is a very active intrigue in progress in London which must be resisted as strenuously as Alikhanoff's intrigues on the Afghan frontier. I had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with Sir Peter Lumsden's private views previous to his departure for Herat, and am persuaded that he and his brilliant staff of officers will do everything in their power to safeguard that point, provided that they are properly supported by the Government of this country. On their behalf I protest against the mendacious statements put forth by Madame de Novikoff in the Pall Mall Gazette, charging them with having, by their reckless aggressions, brought about the present complication. Unless a stop be put pretty quickly and pretty decisively to such intrigues, Russia may succeed in occasioning what she urgently desires—a distracted condition of public opinion, which would paralyse English diplomacy, and render futile the efforts of the Government to turn the Russians off the ground they have occupied. That would be a lamentable condition of things, for the Russian troops are posted closer to Herat than our troops are posted to Candahar, and will require a very strong display of unanimous public feeling to persuade Russia to withdraw them again. Personally, I do not believe Russia under any circumstances will consent to withdraw them. Her generals will argue that it would damage her prestige in Central Asia too much to do so. If she refuses, I do not see how a pacific solution of the difficulty can possibly be arrived at. Supposing we consent to let her remain where she is, on the grounds that it is not worth a war to turn her off the territory she has occupied, England can only safeguard Herat by fortifying it, and there are already symptoms that Russia will not allow her either to increase the defences or move a soldier thither without dashing forward and snatching at the place. For the last fortnight the leading Russian newspapers have been questioning our right to concern ourselves with Herat at all, while the Sviet, which is edited by the brother of General Komaroff, who controls the present advance, demands that Russia should annex Herat out and out. Now, if the Russian Government were really as amiably disposed as M. de Giers endeavours to make us believe, all that would be needed would be a brief message to the editors, and the whole of the barking would cease. Such wirepulling is a part of the regular machinery of the Russian Government. That warlike articles are being published now to inflame the Russian people against England, looks ominously like a contemplated reopening of the Eastern Question in the spring. For the moment we occupy a very advantageous position. We have a powerful force proceeding to the Red Sea, which could be sent on to Kurrathee, and by means of the railway and the new road through the Bolan Pass, rapidly concentrate at Quetta, whence the distance to Herat is only a quarter of that from Cairo to Khartoum. If the Italian alliance is worth anything at all, the two million troops which King Humbert can summon to arms on a declaration of war, ought to be able to furnish such a contingent that Russia could not possibly smash her way into India. It is largely through the Egyptian Question that Russia has caused the conflict in Central Asia to ripen earlier than she herself desired or anticipated, and if Italy is to participate in the profits appertaining to the establishment of influence in Egypt and the Soudan, she ought to participate in the pains of stemming the Russian hostility in the Afghan frontier. If, however, she refuses to co-operate with us against Russia it is our clear duty to place Herat immediately in a condition of defence. And for this reason, at the present moment the Volga is closed with ice, and the greater part of the fifty large steamers, 200 and 300 feet long, which Russia will be able to use in a few weeks time to ferry the troops across the Caspian from the Caucasus to Krasnovodsk, are lying blocked in and dismantled at Astrakhan. Further, the river Volga, down which Russia can send an army in summer larger than she despatched to Constantinople in 1878, will not open throughout its course for another month. That month is of immense importance to us. Sir Peter Lumsden and his 500 picked troops, placed at the head of the garrison of Herat, could hold the Russians in check while General Roberts and Sir Gerald Graham made their advance upon Herat, and we could disregard the threats of Russia to push on to India. But if we wait until Russia concentrates large forces on the Transcaspian region and consolidates her new position, the power of protecting the Key of India will have passed from our hands and Russia will have gained the grandest strategical position in the East—(applause).

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL, M.P., said it was hardly right to call Herat the key of India, as there were a great many keys. Up to a certain point he believed the Russians in their Central Asian policy were in the right, but now he thought they were in the wrong—(hear, hear). Taking advantage of our Egyptian difficulty, they were trying to trick us instead of meeting the commission fairly, as they should do. They had not only sent M. Lessar to influence English opinion and the London Press, but they had seized territory in dispute. He thought they had behaved ill, and he hoped there would be no hesitation in telling them so—(cheers).

M. LESSAR not having accepted the Chairman's invitation to address the meeting, Mr. Kimber moved a resolution condemning the conduct of the Russians, and urging the Government to insist on the immediate withdrawal of their troops, and the submission of the frontier question to the Commission, or to the arbitration of a friendly and impartial Power. The resolution having been seconded, was opposed by a Russian gentleman present, but was finally carried with enthusiasm with only his dissent.—Mr. Le'evre, the president, having vainly invited some one of the members of the Russian Embassy, several of whom were present, to speak, expressed the belief, amid great applause, that if war ensued the Russians would be thoroughly defeated, as Englishmen were unanimous in their resolve not to allow further encroachments.

MR. MARVIN then explained that Herat, with its slight defences and ten small guns, was not in one sense the key of India, but it commanded a valley that could maintain one or two hundred thousand men, and, in the opinion of General Skobelev and of several English generals of distinction, its possession would enable Russia to concentrate an irresistible force for the invasion of India, of which in that sense it certainly was the key—(cheers).

PRODUCE MARKETS.

INDIAN TEA.—Messrs. G. White and Co. report as follows on the Tea Market, from the 12th to the 19th inst. :—The heavy duty payments during the past ten days have taken up the time and taxed the financial resources of the trade, so that latterly the market has become quieter, and previous rates in some cases have been barely maintained. The statistical position of Indian Tea, however, improves daily, and the deliveries for this month will be very heavy, and stock on the 31st will probably be considerably less than at the same time last year. Good liquoring teas remain firm, and full prices have in some cases been paid, but undesirable parcels, especially out of old imports, have been neglected, and prices show a decline of about 3d per lb., as buyers do not appear anxious to increase their stocks at the present time. Ceylon.—The quantity offered this week has been small, but anything of a useful description has met with good competition and sold at firm rates.

IF NOT COOL, WHAT THEN?—A hard-up Government servant the other day thought he would call a meeting of his creditors. He issued a neatly-written circular on St. Valentine's Day, expatiating on the British troubles in the Soudan and the present unhappy state of affairs in Upper Burma, which had so seriously affected the position of every one in this province and had caused mistrust and want of confidence and credit even in official circles. He finally wound up with an offer of such portion of his salary as would, he hoped, before 1890 settle their claims in full. Despatching this touching appeal to the better feelings of his creditors, he calmly awaited their arrival, smoking the pipe of peace. Will, it be believed, that not one single creditor attended the meeting? Our astute friend retired to his home remarking, "Well, if the beggars won't see their own interests I can do no more than I have offered. They can now do their worst."—Rangoon Gazette.

BENGAL, UPPER INDIA, &c.

THE Purneah case occupied two days at the Calcutta High Court last week. After hearing arguments their lordships took time to consider their decision.

ON the 28th ult. Lady Dufferin distributed the prizes to the children attending the girls' schools in connection with the Chinsurah Zenana Mission at Hooghly.

THE Kidderpore Docks Bill comes up for consideration in the Bengal Legislative Council at their next meeting.

GENERAL WILSON's proposed visit to Quetta has been indefinitely postponed by reason of the important work falling on the Military Department in connection with the Soudan campaign.

LORD RANDOLPH CHURCHILL has been visiting the principal cities in the North-West and the Punjab, where he has had frequent conferences with the people.

A VACANCY will shortly occur in the Viceregal Council through the departure of the Hon. Mr. Gibbs for England.

THE affiliation of the Ripon College, Calcutta, to the Calcutta University in Arts up to the B.A. standard and in Law is authorised, with effect from June, 1885.

MR. S. C. F. PEILE has won this, the first year's fight for the Challenge Cup in the North-West Lawn Tennis competition.

THE thanks of the Government of India and an honorarium of Rs. 1,200 have been awarded to Captain E. B. Nixon, of the Punjab Police, for his services in connection with the reorganisation of the Frontier Police and Border Militia.

THE Hon. Mr. Saiyid Mahmood takes a year's leave without pay, when Mr. Justice Tyrrell resumes his seat in the High Court of the North-West Provinces next month. Mr. Mahmood may go to England or to the hills, there devoting himself to the completion of his work on Mahomedan Law.

A CONTEMPORARY states that the Viceroy, on the occasion of his meeting with the Ameer at Rawul Pindi, will, if possible, be attended by the whole of his Council, as well as the Lieutenant-Governors of the Punjab and the North-West Provinces and the Commanders-in-Chief of Madras and Bombay. The affair will last about a week.

SUSPENSION OF MILITARY FURLOUGH.—A General Order has been issued, stopping all military furlough from India, except in special cases.

THE DISTRICT CHARITABLE SOCIETY FRAUDS.—Charles Palmer, charged with criminal misappropriation and breach of trust in connection with the District Charitable Society frauds, has been committed to the sessions.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces paid a visit to Benares on Sunday. His Honour was the guest of the Maharajah, who organised a shooting-party for the occasion in his preserves at Chakia. The Maharajah's other guests were the Chief Justice, Sir Comer Petheram, Mr. W. Holmes, Major Sir G. Larpent, and Mr. F. W. Porter, Magistrate of Benares. Sir Alfred Lyall returned from Chakia to Benares on Wednesday, and has left for Allahabad.

THE Pioneer says :—The North-West, by the way, has narrowly escaped losing its Lieutenant-Governor for good and all. A few days ago Sir Alfred Lyall received a telegram from home offering him a seat in the India Council, but as it was coupled with the condition of immediate acceptance which, to say no more, would involve serious inconvenience to the administration, Sir Alfred concluded to decline it. To forecast our Lieutenant-Governor as eventually finding in the India Office a comparative haven of rest is merely an anticipation of history.

MOFUSSIL NOTES.

(From the Indian Planters' Gazette.)

ON dit that H.H. the Maharaja of Burdwan will be asked to an Honorary Commission in the C. B. L. Horse.

MR. J. J. WHITTY, C.E., is transferred to the Chyebassa section of the Seetaramporee-Nagpore line of Railway, where he will doubtless be as warmly welcomed as he is lamented in his old diggings.

WE hear that another troop of the Central Bengal Light Horse is to be formed in Jessore and Kishnagar, and at this rate we shall soon have a line of Light Horse from Calcutta to Allahabad.

MR. W. R. LARMINE, Commissioner, Chota Nagpore, has taken leave for six weeks and is going for a short visit to Ceylon, en route to which place he stayed a short time in Tirhoot as the guest of Mr. Abbott, at Jaintapore.

OWING to the weather still continuing cold, indigo sowings have only been begun on a small scale in a few factories in Purneah district, and it is expected that they will not become general until the beginning of next month.

H.H. THE MAHARAJA OF DUBUNGA is going in for a royal shoot next month. The party, which will include Lord Randolph Churchill, will be a very large one, and the sport is bound to be very first-rate when Colonel Money has the direction of it.

A DEPUTATION from the Behar Landholders' Association, headed by Baboo Nundo Lall, will shortly leave Mozufferpore to interview the Viceroy, with a view of presenting a protest against the proposed right of transfer being accorded to Behar.

SEEING the heavy expenses to which mounted corps are put, notably such as the Behar and Central Bengal Horse, in which 14-2 is the fixed minimum height for chargers, we think it is high time that Government should increase the wretched sum now given as Capitation grant to, say, Rs.50, for Volunteer Cavalry.

It is, to say the least, rather hard lines for a purely volunteer corps, as was the case of the Behar Light Horse last year, to be mulcted to the tune of about Rs.8,000 for payment of their own railway fare, when attending (by permission) a camp of exercise. This expenditure one would think ought to come from some other source than the pockets of members, most of whom are poorly paid assistants. Cavalry men cannot be placed in the field, man for man, at the same price as Infantry, and we submit that Government should recognise this in the case of all Volunteers.

MADRAS.

A PRELIMINARY meeting was held at Madras on the 28th ult., to arrange for the founding of a hospital for caste native females.

THE disarmament of the Malabar district has been completed without any untoward incident. 8,000 guns and rifles and 5,000 spears and swords have been surrendered.

PONDICHERY AS A FRENCH COALING STATION.—The first French troopship to coal at Pondicherry is expected there on the 5th March.

THE GOVERNOR'S SON.—Mr. E. M. (Grant Duff, the son of H.E. the Governor of Madras, left Madras for Hyderabad on the 23th ult. We understand that he will meet the Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg at Hyderabad, and accompany them on their return to England from Bombay.

MR. JOHN WALLACE.—The Secretary of State has been moved by the personal representations of Mr. John Wallace, late of the Madras Civil Service, to grant him the full pension of £800 a year in lieu of £450 conceded to him in October, 1883.

A MUNICIPAL SUIT FOR LICENSE TAX.—The High Court delivered judgment on March 2nd in the case of an appeal by the Municipality against the magistrate's decision that the Municipality should refund Rs. 50 held to have been illegally demanded from Mr. Wilson, a solicitor, as professional tax. The High Court reversed the finding of the magistrate, and Mr. Wilson pays the full amount claimed. The case has excited much interest here, especially in legal circles.

DESTRUCTION OF CATTLE BY TIGERS AND CHEETAHS.—From a return "showing the cattle destroyed by tigers and cheetahs during the quarter ending December 31st, 1883," we find that in that period, in the whole Presidency, the number of bullocks thus destroyed was 660, of cows 726, calves 312, buffaloes 170, sheep 422, goats 252, horses or ponies 30, asses 29, dogs, 54, pigs 44, and tamed deer 1, making a total of 2,700. South Canara was the greatest loser, the number destroyed amounting to 854. Malabar comes next this, with a total of 448.—Times.

ENTERTAINMENT TO SIR CHARLES TURNER.—The Council of the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association held a meeting on Monday, the 2nd inst., at the rooms of the Association, to take steps for giving a farewell entertainment to Sir Charles Turner, Chief Justice of Madras, who is a vice patron and warm supporter of the Association, and who leaves India next May. It was resolved to ask him to be present at a musical entertainment in his honour, probably at the College Hall. He will further be asked to sit for his photograph, which will be enlarged and hung in the Council Room of the Association.—Mail.

BOMBAY.

MR. CHATFIELD, Director of Public Instruction, Bombay, has been severely mauled by a panther in Khandesh.

MR. D. S. KEMP has been appointed by Government a member of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, vice Surgeon-Major Gray, resigned.

THE vacant Commissionership of Ajmere was offered to Colonel Trevor Plowden, but declined, and Colonel W. Tweedie, C.S.I., has been appointed to the post.

A TUNNEL which was being excavated at Sanaulim on the line of the Marmagoa Railway recently gave way, and five workmen were killed and a number of others were wounded, some of them seriously.

On the 5th inst. his Excellency laid the foundation-stone of the new Fergusson College, and afterwards attended an entertainment given in his honour by the sirdars and native chiefs of the Deccan.

At a meeting of the guarantors of the Bombay International Exhibition, held at the rooms of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, under the presidency of his Excellency the Governor, on Monday, the 2nd inst., it was unanimously resolved that the exhibition should be opened in November, 1887, instead of December, 1886, as previously resolved.

On the 4th inst. his Excellency the Governor proceeded to Poona on a farewell visit. His Excellency laid the foundation-stone of the new High School for Native Girls the same day, and was entertained at a farewell dinner by the members of the Club of Western India in the evening.

H.E. SIR JAMES FERGUSSON presided on Saturday, Feb. 28th, at the annual distribution of prizes to the students attending the Anjuman-i-Islam schools, and in the course of an address on the occasion eulogised the Mahomedans of the city for the exertions they were making to give their children a sound education, and urged them to increased exertion, in order to compete with other classes.

An important decision was arrived at on the 3rd inst. by the members of the Western India Turf Club, who held their annual meeting at Mahaluxmi, under the presidency of Sir Frank Souter. Recognising that pony racing in this country has become as valuable as horse-racing, the club so revised their rules that in future ponies will not lose their maiden privileges until they have become winners of Rs. 200.

MR. HORMUSJEE DADABHOY, late acting judge of the Small Cause Court, was elected on Tuesday, March 3rd, by the ratepayers of the city a member of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, in place of Mr. Dwarkadas Lalloobhoy, the representative of the Bhooleswar ward, resigned. Though Mr. Hormusjee had no rival in the field, about seventy ratepayers, representing all classes of the community, both European and native, attended the Municipal Office during the day to record their votes. Mr. Douglas Bennet, assisted by Mr. D. S. Kohyarjee, acted as polling-officer.

THE DECCAN SIRDARS.—A meeting of sirdars was held in the Council Hall, Poona, on March 5th. Pant Sachet of Bhow read an address before a numerous and distinguished company, among whom were the Chiefs of Sangli, Phaltun, and Ounde. An entertainment of magic and a display of fireworks gave great satisfaction.

BURMA.

THE Commissioner of Tenasserim, after holding sessions at Shoainghe, left for Toungoo on the 7th ult.

THE Executive Engineer at Akyab has at length reported that the new pier is ready for use.

THE Chief Commissioner of Rangoon has sanctioned the purchase, by the Port Commissioners, of a steam launch, to be used as a pilot-tender, at a cost of Rs. 46,606-9-11.

MESSRS. DAWSON AND THOMPSON, of Moulmein, have made application for permission to construct a line of tramway from Mopoon to Dinewoonquin, a convenience which is very much required, indeed. The concessionaries ask for a good deal—ninety-nine years lease of the road free of all taxes, and a free grant of land, near St. Matthew's Cemetery, on which to erect a depot.

A RANGOON telegram says:—"Theebaw is endeavouring to induce the Europeans in Mandalay to proceed to Bhamo to assist the troops. Another dacoity has been committed near Rangoon; six armed men attacked a house, tied up the inmates, and carried off Rs.400 worth of property.

TEN out of the sixteen seamen belonging to the Revella, recently burnt in the Nicobars, are in hospital, suffering from fever contracted in the island.

RANGOON possesses a dairy under European supervision. We read in an advertisement in a local paper that "milk is now supplied to monthly subscribers only at bazaar rates. The milk will be delivered daily at subscribers' residences at six A.M. and five P.M. To prevent adulteration, our customers are requested not to accept any bottles, the seal of which has been removed or damaged."

THE Rangoon correspondent of a contemporary writes:—"The successful raising of the wreck of the steamer Madras by the auction purchaser is a fact on which he may well congratulate himself. I believe the purchasers are a syndicate, the shareholders in which will make some Rs. 60,000 or Rs. 70,000 by their speculation. Many of them worked hard at the wreck, personally superintending the operations, and engineering skill, pluck, and determination have met with their reward. The Madras is now in the Rangoon river, and although times are dull, I have no doubt she will, when done up, eventually fetch a good price."

DISAPPEARANCE OF A CIVIL SERVANT.—Mr. J. N. Pickard, Deputy-Conservator of Forests, Tonghoo, has been missing from his camp. He was seen to leave it at midnight, and is supposed to have been taken by a tiger. Every search made has been unsuccessful. His servants say he was subject to strange fits of abstraction and petulance. He fell overboard from a river steamer eight months ago, and had to proceed on sick leave to Europe.—Mr. Pickard has since been found on March 2nd in a well. Theshallowness of the water saved his life. He is out of his mind.

OBITUARY.

In his fifty-fourth year, Major-General H. Cadogan Craigie, late Lieutenant-Colonel of the 19th Hussars. The deceased, who entered the service in 1848, served in the 3rd Bengal Light Infantry in the Punjab campaign of 1849, and was present at the battle of Goojerat. As captain he raised and commanded a regiment of Irregular Horse under the orders of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, from May, 1857, to January, 1858, during the Indian Mutiny.

MAJOR-GENERAL EDMOND WILLIAM SARGENT, late of the 18th Royal Irish Regiment, died on the 8th inst. at his residence in West Kingstown, Ireland. He entered the Army in 1841, obtained a lieutenancy in 1842, and became captain in 1853. He served with the 18th Royal Irish on the China expedition. The gallant officer was appointed adjutant of the 18th at the storming of Rangoon, on Lieutenant and Adjutant Doran being killed, and served throughout the Burmese war of 1852-3. He was promoted to the rank of major in 1858, became lieutenant-colonel in 1866, colonel in 1877, and major-general in 1882.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

—o—

SURGEON-MAJOR T. B. P. O'BRIEN, Medical Staff, Peshawur, is likely to retire on half-pay.

LIEUTENANT J. LEASK has resigned his commission in the Bombay Volunteer Rifle Corps.

MR. J. R. HATHERLEY and Mr. H. Corke have been appointed lieutenants in the Sind Volunteer Corps.

CAPTAIN S. BOXWELL, 2nd Battalion Northumberland Fusiliers, has been appointed adjutant of the battalion.

CAPTAIN C. J. JAMIESON, 14th Sikhs, will, it is stated, proceed on furlough to Europe on the 21st inst.

THE Gundakinduff post, Quetta District, is to be moved to Sinjawi as a support to Colonel Sandford's escort whilst in Bori.

CAPTAIN A. J. LUSHINGTON, 1st Battalion Dorsetshire Regiment, has been permitted to remain in India until March next.

It has been ordered that the 45th Bengal Infantry will furnish the detachment for Fatehgarh instead of the 38th Bengal Infantry.

THE services of Surgeon Major Barry, M.D., have been placed at the disposal of Government for employment temporarily in the Civil Department.

H.M.'s 98th Foot (North Staffordshire Regiment) arrived at Mhow on the 5th ult. in good health. The annual inspection by the General Commanding the Division took place on the 4th instant.

MAJOR J. G. STONE, Royal Artillery, Superintendent, Small Arms Ammunition Factory, Dum Dum, is expected to proceed home on six months' medical certificate.

LIEUT.-COLONEL JAMES GELLIE, Bengal Staff Corps, Commandant 39th Bengal Infantry, Cawnpore, is proceeding to England on leave, on medical certificate, early this month.

LIEUTENANT WOOD, 2nd Battalion Devonshire Regiment, and Lieutenant Cave, 2nd Battalion Bedfordshire Regiment, have been appointed probationers in the Bombay Staff Corps.

LIEUTENANT J. G. DOWNING, Military Accounts Department, has been posted to the office of the Examiner, Commissariat Accounts, Calcutta, for duty, vice Ramsden, to Egypt on service.

GENERAL WILSON's visit to Quetta has been indefinitely postponed, presumably by reason of the important work now falling upon the Military Department in connection with the Soudan campaign.

THE No. 5 Battery 1st Brigade, Royal Artillery, Southern Division, under the command of Major Vibart, embarks at Calcutta on the 2nd March for Rangoon, en route to Thayetmyo, where it will be quartered. The battery was expected to arrive at Calcutta on the 28th February.

HONORARY CAPTAIN E. HANSTOCK, Paymaster of the East Yorkshire Regiment, died at Matheran on the 24th January. The deceased was appointed Paymaster on the 20th October, 1882.

H.E. THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, who left for Kurrachee on Monday, the 2nd inst., in the s.s. Nowshera, was accompanied by the Quartermaster-General, the Military Secretary and Captain the Hon. A. S. Hardinge, Aide-de-Camp.

WITH the sanction of Government, the Commander-in-Chief in India is pleased to grant furlough to the Bengal Native Army, to the extent where practicable of 15 per cent. of the effective strength of corps, under the conditions laid down in section 13, paras. 217 and 219, Bengal Army Regulations. Furlough will commence from the 15th March, and terminate, save in exceptional cases, on the 15th October, 1885.

SIR SAMUEL BAKER has arrived at Madras. He speaks highly of the new Governor-General of the Soudan, and says he advocated his appointment long ago.

MADRAS ARMY HEAD-QUARTERS.—Our Ootacamund contemporary learns "that there is a probability of army head-quarters being soon removed to Madras again. As coming events cast their shadows before, and the present complications in Europe and Central Asia wear a threatening aspect, there may be some truth in the current rumour." Our contemporary is naturally "of opinion that affairs can be managed as well from here as from Madras." This opinion is not shared by the army at large, and we believe that the head-quarters will be removed to Bangalore within a measurable distance of time. Lord Napier's denunciation of the Ootacamund arrangement has told in high quarters.—Mail.

MOPLA OUTRAGES

TO THE EDITOR

SIR,—In page 214 of the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 25th ultimo, the Editor has sketched the causes which have led to abhorrence of English government in the Malabar District.

When law is united to justice, it is beautiful; when divorced from it, it is ugly and cruel.

The Mopla Mohammedan cultivators, who now require English soldiers to coerce and disarm them, were, sixty-five years ago, the great purchasers and mortgagees of land. Their wealth, industry, and habits of business gave them advantages over the dissolute Nairs (page 277 of Volume II. of Hamilton's Gazetteer), Colonel Wilks, referred to by Hamilton, is a first-rate authority; Hamilton also refers to F. Buchanan, Parliamentary Reports, Thackeray, Dow, &c.

How has this industrious tribe become now the poorest class in Malabar? The sacerdotal class, the Brahmins, and the military class, the Nairs, have gradually absorbed all property. Edward Thornton as late as 1857 calls the Moplas a numerous and important class; many of them are now obliged to work for their living on the coffee plantations of Mysore and Wynaad. They are described as industrious but sullen, and of an uncertain temper; the Brahmins or Sacerdotal class have absorbed their property by highly complicated forms of Lease and Mortgage with their Fines and Recoveries, which have tried the wits of the Madras High Court during the past half-century.

In 1849 Mr. Conolly, the collector, was murdered; between the years 1836 and 1856 there were thirty-eight outrages, and in 1859 the Mopla Outrage Act was passed, which condemned Moplas to imprisonment on suspicion only, and imposed extreme penalties of death. The editor of the Pioneer Mail now writes:—"The accounts of the present disturbances in Malabar in the Madras papers are insufficient to enable us to explain the immediate cause of the rising. But it is well known in Madras that the land question has been engaging the close attention of the Government, and that the district officers have earnestly urged the necessity for legislation, to protect the cultivator and the intermediate tenure-holder. Mr. Logan has reported at length on the subject, and though his report has not been made public, the Moplas are aware that he has advocated a strong tenant-law for the district, and the summary suppression of evictions."—Your obedient servant,

THE LONDON COMMITTEE OF BENGAL LANDHOLDERS AND OTHER INTERESTED IN THE WELFARE OF THE AGRICULTURAL COMMUNITY OF BENGAL AND BEHAR.

At a meeting of the London Committee of Bengal Landholders and others interested in the welfare of the agricultural community of Bengal, held at the Rooms of the Indian Constitutional Association, Victoria-street, S.W., on Wednesday, March 18, at 4 P.M., Mr. C. T. Buckland, late Bengal Civil Service, and member of the Board of Revenue, Bengal, in the chair, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

First Resolution:—"That this Committee, learning from the telegram of the Maharaja Narendra Krishna, published in the Standard of Monday, March 18th, that 'out of two hundred and twenty-eight sections of the original Bill, forty-five sections were omitted, fourteen new sections added, and twenty-two wholly recast in the Select Committee,' is of opinion that the Bill, being thus largely altered, ought to have been republished and circulated in the vernacular languages, in the interests of the ryots as well as of the zemindars. And this Committee desires to express its regret that any doubt should have been thrown on the statement telegraphed by the Maharaja of Darbhanga that the Bill in its present form has not been published in the vernacular, which statement is now shown to have been correct."

Second Resolution:—"That the Chairman be requested to forward copies of these Resolutions to the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, the Under-Secretary of State and the public Press."

Third Resolution:—"That the Chairman be also requested to forward copies of these Resolutions to the Right Hon. the Earl of Wemyss and to Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P., with an expression of the lively satisfaction with which this Committee regards the public spirit which they have displayed in bringing this question, one of vital importance to the peace and welfare of India, before Parliament."

A FRENCH party in Mauritius have started a new journal called Madagascar. The name indicates its object—it is to promote the annexation to France of the great African island.—Athenæum.

TUESDAY, MARCH 24, 1885.

THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE REVISED TENANCY BILL.

THE Gazette of India, dated 14th February, 1885, brings to England the revised text of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, as it emerged from the hands of the Select Committee on the 12th February. It also contains the Report of the Select Committee, recapitulating the amendments made by them in the Bill. Though the Report was signed by the eleven members of the Select Committee, eight of them recorded separate minutes of dissent, so as to show how far they differed from the recommendations of the Committee. There is cause for reflection when we see that the three official members, who agreed on every point, were able to induce the eight other members to sign a joint Report.

The Bill, when it was presented to the Council by the Select Committee last year—i.e., on the 14th March, 1884, contained 228 sections. The Select Committee of the current year has reduced it to 192 sections. Their report of 67 paragraphs is tedious, and it will be sufficient to cite the Committee's own words, on the right of free sale, to show why it is unnecessary to follow them in detail. The Committee say that "the reasons for and against this proposal have been so fully discussed, and are so well known to all interested in such matters, that we shall not lengthen this Report by attempting to recapitulate them." And again, the Committee are content to state that "they have decided, in deference to the opinion of many experienced officers, and, with the consent of the Government of Bengal, to omit the whole chapter providing for the preparation of tables of rates of rent." Such remarks as these can hardly be called explanations.

It necessarily follows that where large omissions are made in a Bill the surviving sections have to be altered and amended so as to produce uniformity. Perhaps it would be tedious to go into particulars. The actual changes made by the Select Committee were the following, as telegraphed by the Maharajah Narendra Krishna:—

Forty-five sections omitted, fourteen new sections added, and twenty-two wholly recast. Taking these figures, even approximately, it shows that one-third of the original Bill was altered. Nevertheless, the Select Committee, in the 67th paragraph of their Report, dated February 12th, 1885, write as follows:—"We do not think that the measure has been so altered as to require republication, and we recommend that it be passed as now amended."

The Select Committee seems to have had some qualm of conscience regarding the publication of the Bill in the usual and prescribed manner, for in the 66th paragraph of their Report they state that the Bill was published three times in the English language in March and April, 1884, and once in each of the Vernacular languages in April and May, 1884. But, as has been shown above, the Bill of 1885 differed to the extent of one-third of its contents from the Bill of 1884. Surely it is a mockery to write of publication in this manner.

If the omissions and alterations of original sections did not necessitate republication (supposing that the Select Committee had power to decide the question, which may be doubted), surely the new sections inserted in the Bill ought to have been published and translated into the Vernacular languages. Some of these new sections are of great importance. For instance, the new section 12 of the Bill interferes in a novel form with freedom of contract. Every voluntary transfer of a permanent tenure is to be made in future only by a registered instrument; and provision is made for the levy of fees, and for the service of sundry notices, all involving expenditure and the services of a lawyer. In the new section 79 a non-occupancy ryot is empowered to make a well for the irrigation of his holding without the consent of his landlord. In the new section 84 certain powers are given to landlords to acquire lands for sundry purposes by compulsory sale. We have not space for further quotations. It is not the question whether these new sections are good or bad; but they are new, and ought to have been published. The final section of the new Bill is quite new, and concerns the construction of the Act. It provides that "this Act shall be read, subject to every Act passed after its commencement by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in Council." The marginal abstract of this section uses the words "hereafter passed." Surely legislation of this prospective character is unusual, even if it is permissible. Why should not the future enactments of the Lieutenant-Governor refer expressly to this Bill when needed, instead of provision being made by this Bill for the yet unborn progeny of the Lieutenant-Governor's Council.

One of the grave defects of the Bill, as put forth by the Select Committee of this year, is that the law is not complete in itself. It provides for the preparation of subordinate Rules of Practice, by no less than three different authorities, on different sections of the Bill. The Board of Revenue is to make Rules on certain points. The High Court is required to draw up Rules for other points; whilst several matters are to be regulated by Rules to be framed by the Local Government. Each set of Rules is to be published, in draft, for one month, before it is finally passed; but when the Rules have once been made, they can be amended, or added to, or cancelled, by the authority which made them; and there is no express provision requiring the publication of these amendments, additions, or cancellments. There is a special reason for noticing these Rule-making provisions. There are some people who fear that the Bill has already become law. But it cannot be set in motion until these Rules are provided; and there will be ample time for the consideration of the Bill by the Secretary of State in Council before the subsidiary Rules are called into existence.

Regarding the Bill itself, it is needless to say much at present. Its vital defect is, that it interferes with freedom of contract between landlord and tenant. Its tendency is to send every cultivator of the soil into the Civil Court, where the Court is to fix "a fair and equitable Rent." It seems to have been in vain that Lord Bramwell exposed the folly and fallacy of such legislation, and the unfitness of a Civil Court to decide on such a point. Even the Bill is ambiguous and inconsistent as to the meaning of a fair and equitable Rent. In section 7, regarding the enhancement of rent of tenure holders, it prescribes that "in determining what is fair and equitable, the Court shall not leave to the tenure-holder as profit less than ten per cent. of the balance which remains, after deducting from the gross rents the expenses of collecting them." In section 27 "it is to be a legal presumption that the rents for the time payable by an occupancy ryot is fair and equitable until the contrary is proved." How are these two passages to be reconciled? And if the tenants and landlords are not driven into the Civil Courts, they are to be required to go before a Registration officer, who is empowered not merely to register the agreement submitted to him, but to go into its merits, and to satisfy himself that it is fair and equitable. It is not patent to everyone that all this legal procedure and investigation must be paid for by somebody; and at a moderate computation one-half of this expense will fall upon the tenant. Has any such reference to Civil Courts and Registration officers been countenanced in other parts of India, where the taxation of the cultivators is so much heavier than it is in Bengal? In the Bengal Regulation, No. 17 of 1793, it was laid down in the preamble that "it is essential to the prosperity of the country and the punctual collection of the public revenue that landholders should have the means of compelling payment of rent from defaulters, without being obliged to have recourse to the Courts of Justice, and incurring the delay and expense necessarily attending a law process for the recovery of every arrear." In the legislation of 1885, the landholder is obliged to go to a Court of Justice to sue for every penny of rent that is not paid to him; and he may not eject a defaulting tenant (even though the tenant has fled) without a suit, and a decree, and a bill of costs. Is it not monstrous that the whole community of agriculturists should be thus forced and trained to litigation, both when a simple bargain is made and when the bargain is broken? The country of Bengal will become a paradise for lawyers, as has been well and forcibly said, but it will be a poor abiding place for those who have to pay the lawyer's bills.

There are numerous other points in the Bill that require the full consideration, which the Earl of Kimberley has fortunately promised to give to it, when the mail brings home the complete and very voluminous papers connected with the Bill. It will be curious to see what was said in the debates in the Council, when the 200 objections and amendments to the 192 sections of the Bill were disposed of with a rapidity which the House of Commons might envy, but is not likely to imitate. Those who have the welfare of the poorer classes of India at heart are more likely to gain a hearing than those who are believed to be merely the advocates of the richer classes; and in the name of the poor ryots of Bengal we trust that the Secretary of State and his Council will carefully review the Bill.

THE KANUNGO AND PUTWARI BILL FOR BENGAL.

A BILL has been introduced in the Bengal Legislative Council under the following title, "A Bill to amend and consolidate the Law relating to Kanungoes and Putwaris in the Lower Provinces of Bengal." This Bill is one of the offshoots of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which is now reported to have been passed in the Legislative Council of the Viceroy of India. When it was found expedient to lighten the bulk of the Tenancy Bill, so as to facilitate its passing in the Viceroy's Council, it was arranged by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal that certain supplementary or subsidiary measures should be carried through the Local Legislative Council of Bengal. One of these measures was the Bill for the Registration of Permanent Tenures, on which we have already had occasion to comment in no very favourable terms. The other measure is the Bill now under consideration, to amend the law relating to Kanungoes and Putwaris in the Lower Provinces of Bengal.

It devolved upon Mr. A. P. Macdonnell to introduce this second Bill in the Bengal Legislative Council, of which he is an official member. No less than three of the secretaries of the Bengal Government are members of this distinguished Council, which is locally designated the Parish Vestry. Mr. Macdonnell is the secretary in the Revenue Department of the Government of Bengal, and for the last eighteen months he has been permitted to make himself the mouthpiece and representative of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in all matters connected with the Bengal Tenancy Bill, since the failing health of Sir Rivers Thompson has unhappily diminished his great natural capacity for affairs. Lord Ripon was pleased to say, in the House of Lords, that no Irishmen had had anything to do with the manipulation of the Bengal Tenancy Bill. Possibly his Lordship may have been the only man in India who was not aware that Mr. Macdonnell is an Irishman. It would be very easy to name several other clever officials from the Sister Isle who are now proud to be considered as the promoters and wirepullers of the Tenancy Bill. But Lord Ripon did not condescend to recognise their services. It is very doubtful if he ever took any real interest in the Tenancy Bill, except to avoid the responsibility of passing it.

When we inform our readers that Mr. Macdonnell made a speech, which occupied more than an hour in its delivery, in asking for formal leave to introduce his Kanungo and Putwari Bill, they will probably excuse us if we hesitate to follow him through the dreary details of his oration. It is reported that Lord Dufferin has had occasion to take objection to the practice, which is permitted in the Indian Councils, that a Member may read his speech. It is obvious that Mr. Macdonnell might have handed the copy of his speech to the reporters, and thus have saved the trial of the temper and patience of his colleagues. He was so good as to volunteer an apology for the wearisome length of his address. If his apology had gone a little further it would have been well. It has been our misfortune to have to wade through his historical review of the subject, and our readers may be satisfied with our assurance that it would have been difficult for anyone to have produced a more one-sided view of the mere historical facts than that which Mr. Macdonnell presented to the Council by way of justification of the measure that he had to propose.

It would be a waste of time to review this ancient history. Kanungoes and Putwaris have never been a success in Bengal since the introduction of Lord Cornwallis's settlement. Sir George Campbell tried to revive the name of Kanungo, and one of his Kanungoes has been seen in the flesh, with patent leather shoes on his feet, and a green silk umbrella over his head. But he died young and disappointed, as it had been his ambition to become a Deputy Magistrate, and not a Kanungo. As to Putwaris, they are practically unknown in Bengal, but some of them are still to be found in Behar. In the North-West Provinces the Putwaris hold a high position as quasi-Government officers, and if some of the officials of the North-West Provinces would venture to speak, they could tell us a pretty tale of the misdeeds of the Putwaris, when the assessment of the Income-tax was practically committed to their hands by the too confiding officers of that Province, who had grown up in the belief that a Putwari was an honest Government official in all Revenue matters.

The text of Mr. Macdonnell's new Bill is not before us; but in his speech which asked for leave to introduce the Bill, he gave a slight sketch of its provisions, from which it may be seen that if the Tenancy Bill is designed to scourge certain persons with small cords, the Kanungo and Putwari Bill is likely to be a scourge of scorpions. Mr. Macdonnell is candid enough to state that the main object of his Bill is to supply the Government of Bengal with a knowledge of facts regarding the agricultural community. He says that the want of a knowledge of these facts has been the greatest want of our Administration in Bengal. Nevertheless, in this ignorance of facts, at least on Mr. Macdonnell's part, he and his friends have forced the Bengal Tenancy Bill upon an unwilling community; and are now seeking to appoint Kanungoes and Putwaris to ascertain the facts. So far as we can ascertain the intentions of Government from Mr. Macdonnell's speech, the new Kanungoes and Putwaris are to be a sort of independent staff, neutral between the zemindars and ryots, keeping up an elaborate system of statistics, from which the Government Revenue officers are to obtain their facts in future. But these new officials will require to be paid, and to be paid rather handsomely, so that their probity and independence may be secured. And how is their pay to be provided? A new cess is to be levied for the purpose. It is to be a cess similar to those which bear the name of the Road Cess and the Public Works Cess, which were imposed by Sir George Campbell and his successors in the Government of Bengal. It is well known that the main burden of these cesses falls upon the poor ryots. The actual amount of each ryot's cess may be small, but it is a heavy income-tax on a very poor man. Moreover, it opens great opportunities for oppression and fraud. If his rent is but two shillings, there is the demand for Road Cess at a penny, and Public Works Cess at a penny, and there is now to be another penny for the Putwari. When is the ryot to see the end of his burdens? How is he to know if his landlord's agent is right or wrong in asking for another penny for the next exhibition of Indian goods in London? So far as we can see, Mr. Macdonnell's Bill for the establishment of Kanungoes and Putwaris promises to be one of the greatest misfortunes that could be inflicted on the agricultural community of Bengal.

In the Budget of India, which was published at Calcutta on Tuesday last, Sir Auckland Colvin estimates the revenue for the ensuing year at over seventy-two millions sterling, and that the expenditure will leave a surplus of about half-a-million. The resources of the country, the Finance Minister says, are fully sufficient to meet the normal expenditure; but if abnormal expenditure is forced upon the Government the Estimates may prove unequal to meet it.

The last instalment of a grant in aid of the expenditure incurred by the Government of India upon the war in Afghanistan in the years 1878-1880 is estimated as required in the year ending the 31st March, 1886, at a quarter of a million, the same sum as was granted in the current year. The Imperial grant in aid of this expenditure is in all £5,000,000, of which part has been met by the remission of the debt of £2,000,000 incurred by the Government of India in 1879, and £2,750,000 has been provided by previous votes in Supply.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

We recently directed attention to some of the grievances of the Civil Service in these provinces. In attempting to suggest a remedy for the present state of the service, we are well aware of the difficulties which beset the path of reform, for a highly salutary reform it would be which would restore to the service its pristine vigour and usefulness. But scant sympathy can be looked for from the heads of the service, who, with few exceptions, have chosen to regard the matter from a selfish or an indifferent point of view. It will be necessary, too, to combat the inertia of the India Office, the traditions of which will lead it to offer the stereotyped objection that alleviatory measures involve an increase in the cost of government. "It is true," will be the reply to those who are suing for justice; "your case is as bad as that of the North-West Provinces in 1873; it is worse than it was in 1876; and you may well envy the lot of your Indian colleagues of 1883. But, in spite of the precedent afforded by the concessions granted in each of those years, we can do nothing for you now, for we cannot increase the cost of government." What, we may ask, would be the fate in a court of law of a private employer who offered such an excuse as this for a breach of contract with his servants. And what pecuniary sacrifices would be really excessive if, as in the present instance, the efficiency of the Civil Service is at stake? Let our civilian readers, therefore, urge their claims loyally and temperately, and they may be assured of the sympathy of all right-thinking men. They can scarcely do better than found their case upon the recommendations of the committee of 1876, which, for the benefit of those who have not had access to the papers, we may here briefly reproduce. They were as follows:—

(1.) The offer in the case of men of the crowded years—in this instance 1861–63—of the full pension of £1,000, irrespective of the period of residence in India.

(2.) The offer to men of subsequent years of proportionate pensions, i.e., pensions bearing the same ratio to £1,000 as their length of residence bears to 21 years.

(3.) Bonuses to induce the retirement of military and uncovenanted officers in non-regulation districts, amounting to a year's pay, up to a maximum of Rs. 22,000.

(4.) Minimum guaranteed allowances to officers whose promotion has been unduly retarded on the following scale:—

		Rs.
During the 6th	year's service	550
" 7th and 8th	"	600
" 9th and 10th	"	700
" 11th	"	800
" 12th and 13th	"	900
" 14th	"	1,000
After 14 years	"	1,200

We will only add that the present crisis in the history of the Civil Fund, when the question of the transfer of its management from the hands of the service to that of Government is being mooted, offers an eminently favourable opportunity for securing a substantial concession and facilitating the flow of promotion. Our non-civilian readers are, perhaps, unaware that a member of the Covenanted Service on his retirement can only claim the full benefit of the fund by making up the amount of his subscriptions to Rs. 25,000; and half benefits by bringing up his subscriptions to a moiety of that sum. It is obvious that where promotion has been unduly retarded the amount to the credit of the unlucky official will probably fall far short of that required, and his inability to pay the difference will necessarily preclude his retirement.

Sir John Strachey proposed, in the year 1876, that in cases of premature retirement under the scheme then proposed the requisite minima should be made up by Government. It appears only equitable that the abolition of these onerous contributions should be made a condition precedent to the desired transfer of the Fund assets.—Englishman.

THE DESAI'S OF NOWSAREE.—We understand that a member of the Desai family of Nowsaree is preparing to publish in a bulky volume the history of the celebrated Desais who had in their hands the government of some of the principal towns in the Gaekwari States in former years. The volume will contain copies of some very important State documents.—Jam-i-Jamshed.

Miscellaneous.

THE SHAH OF PERSIA has sanctioned the payment of Rs. 2,00,000 from the military treasury for the construction of a tram line from Mahmera to Ispahan, Teheran, and Shiraz. Some of the principal Persian merchants have undertaken to make good any amount that may be required over and above the sum sanctioned by Government. The work has already commenced.—Rast Gofar.

A CURIOUS MANIFESTO.—We have received a printed copy of a proclamation signed by the five Ranees of Vankaneer. It is addressed to "our faithful subjects." The Ranees complain that for the last seventeen days a number of people left their homes on account of some zoolum at the hands of the State karbharee. The document does not state what the nature of the alleged zoolum is. We have seen during the Cambay exodus that this "leaving home" may sometimes be attributed to State intrigues, and unfortunately Native States are very much subject to such intrigues. We must add that in the Kattywar Native States women take a larger share in the State rows than the men. A sentence inadvertently quoted by the Ranees that the "Political agent thinks this allegation uncalled for, and probably countenanced by the Ranees," is a sufficient excuse for us to wait for the other side of the question.—Rast Gofar.

THE MADHI.—If the likeness of the Madhi, given in the Bombay Gazette of Wednesday, is faithful—and it is not likely to be a flattered one in this case—we are not at all surprised at his success in arms. It is the face of a thinker, an organiser, and a leader of men. In what he and his adherents deem to be a just cause the moral ascendancy of such a military and religious chief could not be resisted even in the towering presence of a hero like Gordon. The English are in for a very troublesome business. It has cost them too dearly already, and we only pray they may be out of it without further damage to the national credit.—Indian Spectator.

THE INDIA COUNCIL.—Is it not time that some changes should be made in the constitution of the India Council? It is now the rule to fill up vacancies in the Council by electing retired members of the Civil Service or some retired merchants, who by their fads do more harm than good to the country they are supposed to represent. We may quote here the instance of the narrow gauge railway, which is purely the result of whim. Truth suggests that members of the India Council should be retired Anglo-Indians selected by the natives. Even this concession, small as it is, ought to be considered welcome. Why cannot the administrators in England try the experiment of native members selected by the Viceroy.—Jam-i-Jamshed.

A STATUTORY CIVILIAN.—Mr. Jahangir Mian, the Statutory Civilian at Ahmedabad, has resigned service. He was a present to the Government, we believe, from Colonel Barton, late Political Agent, Kattywar, who took special interest in him and his elder brother, the Nawab Sahib of Mangrol. Soon after joining his appointment Master Jahangir was found to be a bit of a white elephant, and no amount of persuasion or coercion, it is said could make him pass the departmental examination. This is unfortunate, not so much for the youthful ex-Civilian, as for the Government who nominated him and the political officer at whose instance he was enabled to trifle with the destinies of a big collectorate. Thus do our rulers manage the affairs of State!—Indian Spectator.

THE RAJA OF BANSDA.—The young Raja of Bansda is to be invested with full administrative authority in his State from the 5th instant. The investiture ceremony will be performed on behalf of the Bombay Government by Mr. Sheppherd, Commissioner N.D. Mr. Mullock, the Collector of Surat, will also be present on the occasion.—Rast Gofar.

THE CHAIRMANSHIP OF THE CORPORATION.—The Indian Spectator says: If Mr. Geary cares for the chairmanship of the Corporation he may have it for the mere asking. His services generally, and those rendered to the city's interests in particular, as guide and moderator are entitled to a lasting recognition. And we should be glad on the first opportunity to see his experience utilised by the local legislature. As to the present chairman of the Corporation it would seem scarcely necessary to renew his term in view of the growing desire on the part of the Government to strengthen the constitution of the Legislative Council. The Council has two capital representatives of the people in Messrs. Budrudin and Telang. But their somewhat placid wisdom needs a little of the combative element to complete its usefulness. And this element Mr. Mehta can supply admirably. The proceedings of the Council have been seldom enlivened by a debate in the popular sense since Mr. Mandlike's elevation to the superior body. Is there any particular objection to two Parsees representing native interests?

CURRENT REPENTANCE.

By "A. B. C. S."

"A powerful psychical study, dealing largely with modern Anglo-Indian civilian life, and giving a fascinating portrait of it."

"Here is a work, smartly written, with plot well worked out, and admirable descriptions of Indian scenery. . . . The pompous priggishness of an Indian station is well described."—Life

"A curious but clever and readable story."—Society.

"'Current Repentance' has much that will arrest and retain the reader's attention."—Morning Post.

"The author writes pleasantly and cleverly."—Whitehall Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, March 13th; Madras and Allahabad, March 11th; Calcutta, March 10th; Burma, March 6th.

DURING the past week all other subjects have faded into comparative obscurity before the absorbing interest of the Russian menace. We deal in our leading columns with the latest and most audacious developments of those ridiculous pretences by which Russia habitually veils her acts of aggression. It is much to be regretted that such a paper as the Pall Mall Gazette, which has in its Egyptian policy shown a patriotic spirit of revolt against the tyranny of Radicalism, should have taken up an attitude on the Russo-Afghan frontier question that is positively childish in its blind credulity.

THE mischief caused by the abandonment of the Quetta Railway and the dispersion of its stores and rolling-stock—much of which was sent round, at enormous cost, by Lord Ripon to the Northern Punjab—is now severely felt by the Indian military authorities. But this, of course, is only one point in many in which we have suffered in our national interest from the utterly vicious "reversal policy" of 1880. Had we not "scuttled" in the disastrous years of Mr. Gladstone's triumph there would have been no need of all this warlike bustle and expenditure.

It is no use to cry over spilt milk. But the nation ought, at any rate, to have this lesson brought clearly home to the mind of the public—that it is absolutely impossible to carry on the affairs of a great Empire, if we are suddenly to reverse our national policy all over the world, abandoning great enterprises and throwing overboard all our alliances, every time the chance of the ballot-boxes causes a change of Government.

It would be laughable, if it were not such a serious matter, to observe how we are now thanking Heaven for any accident that has prevented the Gladstone-Ripon faction from carrying out the reversal policy in some of its minor details. For instance, the patriotic Commander-in-Chief in India, Sir Donald Stewart, has managed quietly to construct a good road up through the Bolan Pass. This valuable work has fortunately escaped the destructive vigilance of Lord Ripon, and now it is found to be of inestimable advantage to us.

As in the matter of the railway, so too in regard to personnel of the Native Army. Three years ago we disbanded several Native regiments, casting adrift large numbers of faithful and seasoned veterans, and crediting the miserable proceeds of this paltry cheese-paring to the "economy"—save the mark!—of Lord Ripon's Administration, which was thereby enabled to create a lot of highly-paid appointments for the ever-lucky Dowb. Now we have to fill their places, at enormous cost and in a great hurry by raw recruits.

HAPPILY, at the present crisis, there is nowhere visible the faintest sign of this detestable party-spirit. Everywhere, among Tories and Radicals alike, among Indians and Englishmen alike, the cry is "Thank God for Lord Dufferin."

AND, as we have always confidently asserted would be the case, nowhere is the spirit of active loyalty to our beloved Queen, Empress of India, and to our common Empire, more conspicuous than among our Indian fellow-subjects, and among Her Imperial Majesty's Feudatories.

IN this connection, nothing could be more well-timed or appropriate to the occasion than Sir Lepel Griffin's spirited speech at Rutlam. Sir Leppel is quite right in saying that the troops of our Feudatories will "eagerly accept the opportunity" of serving shoulder-to-shoulder with their comrades in the regular army of the Empress. We trust that this opportunity will now be afforded them, and that the loyal offers of the chiefs will be largely accepted. The Maharajah Sindia's offer of personal service in the field is a remarkable instance of this excellent spirit, and we have no doubt that his Highness's well-known soldierly qualities would entirely justify the confidence of the Government of India. We believe that the long-vexed question of the armies of the Feudatory states may receive a solution from existing circumstances and accomplished facts of a nature more satisfactory to all parties than any that has yet been suggested, and one that will at the same time largely add to the defensive strength of the Empire and the peace and prosperity of India.

THE Government is wisely clearing away the useless lumber of various ill-considered or obnoxious projects. The Calcutta Dock scheme is virtually abandoned; and we earnestly hope that this prudent course may also be followed in a far more momentous affair, by the withdrawal or indefinite suspension of the Bengal Tenancy Blunder. At such a time as the present, when all classes are emulating each other in manifestations of spontaneous loyalty—when we learn from the Times correspondent that the vernacular Press of Bengal has risen to the occasion and is conspicuously loyal—nothing more ungracious or impolitic could possibly be conceived than a persistence in this irritating and oppressive measure.

THE Memorial on the subject of the Bill as amended in Select Committee, that has been submitted to his Excellency the Viceroy by the Central Committee of Landholders of Bengal and Behar, has reached England by this mail. We have no hesitation in affirming that it contains one of the most clear and conclusive refutations of the mischievous theories of the Bill that has been made public up to the present time. We doubt not that Lord Dufferin has forwarded copies of it to the Secretary of State for the consideration of his Lordship in Council, and we fully hope that it will have the happy effect of inducing Lord Kimberley to withhold the sanction of the Imperial Government.

We hope shortly to place this remarkable memorial before our readers in extenso; and will return to the subject in our next week's issue.

Lord Wemyss's public-spirited efforts on behalf of the unrepresented millions of Bengal in the matter of this Bill have obtained for his lordship hosts of friends and admirers in that country. They, as well as all those who honour pluck and devotion to the cause of duty, will rejoice to hear that Lord Wemyss's gallant son—whose exploit at Hasheen has well-earned for him that reward "For Valour" which is the best-loved prize of the British soldier—is now on a fair way to recovery from the wound he received in saving Sir John McNeill's life.

We believe it is an open secret that the author of the very striking and successful pamphlet on "Russian Ethnography, or the Crisis in Central Asia" (Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co.) which is just now being read by everybody, is no less qualified an authority on the subject than Colonel Arthur Conolly of the Bengal Staff Corps—a nephew, by the way, of the famous Conolly who was murdered with Stoddart in the Khanates. Colonel Conolly, who is now commanding a local corps in Rajputana, was through the Afghan campaign, and had already seen much service on the North-West Frontier, so that he writes from the best personal knowledge of the facts. The central idea of the pamphlet is to urge the advisability of striking at Russia in the Caucasus, and the arguments used are undoubtedly most telling.

GENERAL C. L. SHOWERS has issued a powerful appeal to the electors of the United Kingdom on the same subject, in a pamphlet entitled "The Cossack at the Gate of India." General Showers has written frequently and effectively on this subject for nearly twenty years past, and is now able, like the rest of those who have written from personal knowledge, to point to accomplished facts as fully justifying all his old contentions. He desires to see us pay greater attention to the possibilities of striking at Russia on the side of Persia, and would like to get a British railway from the Gulf to Teheran and on to Teheran, with branches to Meshed and Herat.

THE Indian Constitutional Association has made a most important and timely contribution to the cause of justice and right, by publishing in pamphlet form a full account of the famous, or infamous, "Midnapore Ryots' case." We have already dealt with their case several times in these columns; but the more it is looked into, the worse it becomes. We shall take an early opportunity of returning to it. Meanwhile, we earnestly commend the consideration of the extraordinary disclosures herein made public to the Liberty and Property Defence League, as well as to all those who hate oppression and injustice.

THE great literary event of the year is undoubtedly the publication of the first instalment of Lord Lytton's great poem, "Glenaveril." Already the unanimous verdict of the public is, that it not only far transcends "Lucille" and all former productions of the noble author, but also promises to place Lord Lytton in the front rank of England's great poets, on whom the mantle of Byron has descended, happily unstained by Byron's coarseness and lax morality. Lord Lytton's graceful Horatian style is nowhere seen to more advantage than in the lines in which he depicts the great leader of the Conservative party, Lord Salisbury, in language of rare delicacy and epigrammatic force.

A NEW novel, to be entitled "Karma," by Mr. A. P. Sinnett, author of "The Occult World" and "Esoteric Buddhism," will be published in the early part of April by Messrs. Chapman and Hall. The story will be concerned with incidents of an "occult" character. Mr. Sinnett's many friends in India, who are by no means confined to theosophical coteries, will look with great interest for the appearance of this work.

THE Englishman has the following account of the Calcutta Freight Market, corrected to March 10:—

A very fair amount of business has been done in our freight market since last mail, chiefly in steamer engagements of seeds for March and early April shipment at slightly improving rates. In sailing tonnage, on the other hand, there is very little doing, and very little cargo offering. Our unfixed tonnage stands somewhat increased again, and amounts to 15,000 tons to-day.

THE following on the Calcutta Indigo Market is taken from Messrs. W. Moran and Co.'s Market Report:—

Of the stock that remained unsold at the date of our last issue a large proportion has been disposed of at about previous rates. Our advices from Lower Bengal are not favourable. We hear of general complaints of want of rain to bring on the October plant, and to enable planters to get in their spring sowings, which in some places have been stopped for want of moisture. In Behar sowings have now generally commenced, and some slight showers are reported to have fallen within the last few days, which, though not heavy enough to improve the moisture, have necessitated the resowing of some of the light lands, chiefly in the Southern districts.

THE same firm gives the following account of the Calcutta Tea Market:—

The sales held on Thursday, the 5th instant, passed with good spirit for all useful kinds at a marked advance on previous rates; good Pekoe Souchongs and Common Broken sorts ruling decidedly firmer. 3,226 packages were offered, all of which found buyers.

Reports from various districts are not so favourable, and rain is generally wanted, particularly in Cachar and Sylhet.

THE Times of India has the following obituary till the departure of the mail, March 13th:—

Dr. J. A. Greene, Serampore.

An ambulance invented by Messrs. McDermott and Chater, in which coolies are transported on wheels, is to be issued to the 2nd Battalion Seaforth Highlanders on the march from Lucknow to Bareilly, for trial.

Telegraphic Intelligence.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent at Calcutta, dated March 29:—

"The Central Asian crisis, the military preparations in view of it, and the approaching conference at Rawul Pindi continue to absorb the general attention, and leave the Indian public little leisure to think of less important subjects. Telegrams from Europe are awaited with constantly-increasing interest; and one which will decide the question 'peace or war?' is expected daily.

"Rumours of the wildest kind are flying about, and usually take the form of a positive statement that war has actually been declared, or an equally positive assertion that some disaster has overtaken the Frontier Commission. These rumours may generally be traced to the bazaar, and are probably due to the existence of an imperfect knowledge of the situation among the lower class of native traders. One thing, however, becomes more evident every day—namely, that the natives of all races, religions, and classes thoroughly identify themselves with the British cause. The abusive and somewhat seditious tone which marked a portion of the native Press until a few weeks ago has entirely disappeared, and it is clear that even the least contented among the educated natives fully recognize that the grievances of which they lately complained are very trivial as compared with those which would await them under the Russian régime. The princes have vied with one another in offering to place their entire resources at the disposal of the Government, and Scindia has made a proffer of his personal services in the field.

"The military preparations are being pushed on rapidly, and a few weeks will probably see a large, well-equipped army stationed at Pishin. The advance of that army would have been greatly facilitated but for the unhappy policy which stopped the laying of the Quetta Railway; but thanks to Sir D. Stewart a good road has been constructed through the Bolan Pass, so that the difficulties will not be quite so great as they would have been had the Ministry and Lord Ripon altogether undone Lord Lytton's measures.

"Another piece of short-sighted economy, of which we are now reaping the fruits, was the disbanding of several native regiments, carried out three years ago. It is probable that steps will now be taken to add two companies to every Infantry regiment and one squadron to every Cavalry regiment, making a total addition of about 25,000 men. It is probable also that some new Goorkha regiments will be raised. It is understood that the Nepaulese Government is ready to give every facility for recruiting in its dominions. The confidence manifested in Lord Dufferin and his military advisers is unabated. The Indian public is thoroughly convinced that its interests are in good hands, and that it may await the issue without apprehension.

"The Viceroy left Calcutta on Monday evening, arrived in Allahabad on Tuesday, and resumed his journey on the following evening. A short halt was made at Toondla, where he met and had a conference with Scindia. Lord Dufferin then proceeded direct to Rawal Pindi, arriving there on Friday. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught will attend the Durbar after all. Their plans have undergone several changes lately, but it is now announced that they will return to England next month, and that the Duke will not command a division in Beloochistan.

"The warlike aspect of the situation has brought the question of volunteering prominently forward, and there has been much discussion on the subject in the newspapers lately. There are in India about 70,000 Europeans and Eurasians unconnected with the military establishment. Most of them are able-bodied men in the prime of life, but many of them have no time for drill. The question is, how can their services be made available? Certain proposals made by Mr. Rivett Carnac, Colonel of the Ghazipore Volunteers, have been under the consideration of the Government, and are likely to be approved. They include the forming of a Volunteer Reserve of men who are unable to go through regular discipline. These men would each receive a rifle, and a certain quantity of ammunition yearly. Uniform would not be compulsory, but the men would be enrolled, and be encouraged in the practice of shooting, while a yearly capitulation allowance would be granted to each man making himself efficient. It is believed that by these means the Volunteer force available on an emergency would be largely increased.

"Sir Lepel Griffin, in opening a hospital at Rutlam, in Malwa, delivered a remarkable speech to the Rajah and chiefs. He believed, he said, that the armies of the native States might be a source of great strength to the Government. They would eagerly accept the opportunity of serving beside the Queen's soldiers. They were no less ready than Canada and Australia to join the Imperial federation of mutual friendly services. England had not yet acquired the bad habit of counting her enemies, and when she put her back against the door there was no one, in Asia or in Africa, who would open it. These wars and rumours of wars were rather an advantage than a loss to the Empire, and not their least good was that they demonstrated to the world the loyalty and good spirit of the Indian princes, and proved that the British Government was founded on a strong rock—namely, the contentment of the princes and people of India.”

The following is from the Times correspondent at Rawul Pindi, dated March 28:—

“The Viceroy has received and returned the visits of the ruling chiefs. In the evening he held a levée.

“The whole of the force ordered to assemble at Rawul Pindi has arrived, the last wing of the 19th Bengal Cavalry having come in to-day.

“The arrangements for accommodating the civil and military officers appear to give general satisfaction.

“The Viceroy's camp is on the racecourse, west of the cantonments, and presents a handsome appearance. Two broad, metalled roads lead to it, separated by a band of turf, studded with plants, grouped round fountains. They are bounded on either side by a long row of large tents, placed well back, and connected with canvas walls. These tents lead to the large durbar tent, at the end of the enclosure. At night the camp is brilliantly lighted with gas and coloured lanterns, which mark the entrances to the tents, adding to the general effect. The Viceroy's escort is encamped here.

“South of the Viceroy's camp, on the opposite side of the Peshawur road, are the E. A. Royal Horse Artillery, the 9th Lancers, the Seaforth Highlanders, the 1st Bengal Infantry, and the Corps of Guides, under the command of Colonel Campbell.

“East of the escort camp is the camp of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

“The civil camp, which adjoins the Commander-in-Chief's camp, is on the Infantry parade ground in the middle of the cantonments.

“It had been arranged to place the Ameer's camp near the park, to the south-east of the cantonments; but the tents sent for his use were found to be unsuitable, and he is to be lodged in a house there, which has been richly furnished. The Cashmere durbar tent, lent by the Maharajah, has been pitched on the lawn.

“The troops encamped on the Khunna plains, about two miles to the east of the cantonments, are the Rifle Brigade and the 4th and 5th Goorkhas, brigaded together in the 1st Infantry Division. The Rifle Brigade turned out and pitched the tents for the 4th Goorkhas, who arrived late.

“The Punjab chiefs are encamped to the north of the city. This closes the list of camps.

“The military authorities have settled every detail for the advance of 50,000 men to Pishin. The scheme has been submitted to the Viceroy for his approval.

“Rumours as to the distribution of the chief commands are current. I refrain from communicating them, as these anticipations may not in every instance be realised.”

“His Highness the Ameer of Afghanistan was received on the 28th on the boundary of the Afghan territory at Toryham, west of Lundi Kotal, by Colonel Waterfield, Commissioner of Peshawur, escorted by the 1st Bengal Cavalry.

“His Highness is accompanied by about 2,000 men—cavalry, infantry, and a battery of six mounted screw guns. All are the guests of the British Government. He encamped that day at Lundi Kotal.

“On the 28th he marched through Ali Musjid to the Shagai heights, whence our heavy guns were placed on Ali Musjid in November, 1878.

“On the 29th at Jamrud he was met by Colonel T. Gordon, appointed on behalf of the Viceroy to be in waiting on the Ameer, and he was received with a Royal salute from the Royal Artillery and the 12th Bengal Cavalry.

“The Ameer enters Peshawur on Monday morning. The road into the cantonments will be lined by the garrison of some seven regiments and 4,000 men.

“The Commissioner of Peshawur makes on behalf of the Punjab Government all the arrangements for his reception and transport to Rawul Pindi, and accompanies the Ameer, who leaves Peshawur the same evening by train, accompanied by part of his escort of artillery, infantry, and cavalry, comprising about 600 horses. He will reach Rawul Pindi early on Tuesday morning.

“The Ameer is a hale, large man, full of conversation. He prides himself on his powers of organisation, on his varied travels, and extensive knowledge thus acquired. He appears extremely self-reliant. He notices everything, and makes very pertinent remarks.

“He is in excellent spirits, and expresses the great satisfaction which he feels at having been able to accomplish this, his first visit to India. The glimpse of the Peshawur valley from the mouth of the Khyber reminded him of Balkh.”

“The Bengal Local Self-Government Bill was discussed in the Provincial Legislature yesterday. A number of amendments were disposed of, and the Bill now awaits its formal passing, which will probably occur next Saturday. It differs so greatly from the Bill introduced two years ago as to be practically a new measure, the main point of difference being that local bodies will be more completely under the control of district officers than was originally contemplated.

“The opposition offered to the Calcutta docks scheme seems to have induced the Government to pause in the prosecution of it. A medical Commission has been appointed to inquire into the sanitary aspects of the scheme. It is understood also that the Government has refused to lend the funds required, and has told the Port Commissioners that they must raise them in the open market.

“The last official report on the prospects of the wheat crop states that with the exception of the North-Western Provinces and Oude, where the rust has injured the crop, prospects remain practically unchanged, and the previous favourable anticipations are likely to be generally realised. Tea and indigo prospects are also fairly good.

“Sir James Fergusson left Bombay on Friday last. Judging from the number of farewell addresses and banquets his departure seems to be generally regretted in the Western Presidency. The verdict of the Indian Press on his official career is generally favourable.

“Lord Reay is expected to-morrow.”

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

When Sir Herbert Maxwell recently put a question to the Government in reference to the way the Bengal Tenancy Bill was being rushed through the Council without republication after it had been reconstructed by the Select Committee, Mr. Cross treated the subject with more ridicule than respect, but it is characteristic of the member for Bolton to cloak his ignorance with impertinence, and it is only the official position he holds which causes importance to attach to anything that emanates from his mouth. Though this Under-Secretary may not be aware of the fact, the Bengal Tenancy Bill is a measure affecting many millions of people either directly or indirectly, and it is about as free from equity as the Irish land legislation, depriving of their property people whose rights were guaranteed by the Government. In ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL there are some answers to the recent speech of the Viceroy, who emphatically denied that the Bill was being “rushed through,” and referring to the mischief likely to be caused by founding motions or questions in Parliament upon “inaccurate statements forwarded to London by interested parties.” One of these answers, just telegraphed from India, is from the Hon. A. B. Miller, member of the Legislative Council of Bengal, a gentleman of great experience and held in high esteem. Mr. Miller places the subject in a very different light from that of the truckling and blundering Government, whose officials overwhelmingly preponderate in the Council and on the Select Committee. It is clear that the Bill was “rushed through,” and that it is very much more likely to do harm than accomplish any good. “The landed classes,” says Mr. Miller, “view the threatened legislation with utter dismay. It is to be earnestly hoped, in the interest of the whole community, that the Secretary of State will arrest the widespread feeling of indignation by promptly vetoing the Bill.” The opposition to the measure is not a mere sentimental one. The Bill is inimical to the material interests of vast numbers of people. As the Maharajah Sir Jotindro Mohun Tagore remarked, “their rights, their social position—nay, their very means of living—are at stake.” The Maharajah of Darbhanga, chief representative of the Indian native community in the Viceroy's Council, whose speech has been telegraphed entire, delivered a very emphatic protest against the way the Bill was being pushed through the Council to deal with matters about which practically nothing was known. The measure is a “leap in the dark” which is certain to irritate the majority of people, while it cannot possibly benefit anybody. The Maharajah of Darbhanga views the proposals as disastrous from every standpoint. He emphatically declares that it will be disastrous in a political sense, because it will be a flagrant breach of the Permanent Settlement, and will shake confidence in the Government; it will be disastrous to the zemindars, depriving them of their rights, and rendering zemindari management for the future absolutely impossible; and it will be disastrous to the ryots, giving rise to endless disputes and interminable litigation. The Maharajah is not opposed to reform, but he is opposed to a change which includes revolution and confiscation.—Liverpool Courier.

In Calcutta the Russian advance and the Bengal Tenancy Bill are the most exciting topics, and the former subject is, of course, now Mr. Gladstone's “arrangement” or “agreement” business, or whatever he chooses to call it, has been made known by wire a heartburning one. That Russia has intentions eventually on India we have never for a moment doubted, albeit not alarmists, and the Egyptian difficulty is just the opportunity Russia would be likely to seize on.—Society.

But that such a time should have been chosen to rush an ill-considered, ill-advised Bill, as is this Bengal Tenancy Bill, into law is a fatal mistake. Why, when we need the loyal aid of the native noblemen more than we have almost ever done, should we by a foolish measure alienate the very men—the landholders of India—whose friendship it is our best policy to keep? The Bill will in time ruin the landowners through litigation, and thus produce among them disaffection. It will bring down the position of the actual cultivator to that of a mere cottier-tenant, rack-rented by the usurious middleman; and, above all, it is a direct infringement of the Permanent Settlement.—Id.

Many of the Indian landowners see already what a future is before them; the feeling will spread in intensity as the provisions of the Bill become more widely known, and what will be the result to England? No one who knows India and is not blinded by party feeling can fail to answer that the result must be a loosening of our hold on the people of India.—Id.

Whether for good or for evil, this Bill has at last become law. For ourselves we think it will be found to be unworkable. This record will be remembered, perhaps, five years hence. We wish the zemindars and the ryots joy of a measure that cannot fail of proving to be a bone of contention. If the "briefless" of India had concocted a scheme for their own benefit they could not have done better. A few simple regulations which might have been dispensed in a local sense would have answered the purpose. The new machinery is too ponderous to be workable.—Colonies and India.

In telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs.3,00,000, average rate ls. 6-9d.; on Bombay, Rs.2,50,000, average rate ls. 6-9d., and on Madras, Rs.1,00,000, average rate ls. 6-9d., or a total of Rs.29,07,000. Tenders for bills on all Presidencies at ls. 6 13-16d. and above will receive in full, and for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at ls. 6 29-32d. in full. Fifty lakhs are to be offered for tender next Wednesday. Between April 1 and March 24 inclusive the Council sold remittances for Rs.16,71,85,118, realising £13,455,507.

M. VAMBERY, the Hungarian traveller, has been invited by the Scottish Geographical Society to lecture at Edinburgh.

THE NEW INDIAN LOAN.—A Bill has been prepared to enable the Secretary of State to raise any sum not exceeding £10,000,000 in the United Kingdom for the Service of the Government of India. For this purpose bonds may be issued for such amounts, payable after such notice, and at such rate of interest as the Secretary of State in Council may think fit. Or debentures may be issued, the Secretary of State in Council having full power to fix the terms, the amounts, the rates of interest, and the price. Or capital stock may be created at such rate of interest and on such terms as the Secretary of State in Council may determine, save that it may bear interest during such period and be paid off at par at such time as the Secretary of State in Council may prescribe previously to the issue.

THE RECALL OF OFFICERS.—A large number of officers on furlough will proceed during the week to India by P. and O. steamers in order to resume duty in that country. Several will, on arrival, proceed direct to Quetta, to join the force ordered thither. Such officers as are on sick leave will be examined by a medical board at the India Office this (Tuesday) afternoon. The following officers left London on Friday last to rejoin their regiments in India:—Major Aislabie, Major J. Hay, Captain H. A. Vincent, Colonel Rowband, Lieutenant J. Lamb, Major Blanchard, Colonel Collis, Captain Dyce, Colonel H. B. Hanna, Major Money, Colonel Justice, Colonel Clabby, Major Young, Lieutenant Ramsay, Colonel Sandwith, Major Beresford, Captain Radcliffe, Major Hall, Major Hume, Colonel Woulfe Hay, Colonel R. Griffith, Major K. Heath, and Captain Bromley.

BRITISH RELATIONS WITH BURMA.—On Wednesday last a deputation from the London Chamber of Commerce had an interview with Lord Kimberley and Mr. J. K. Cross, M.P., at the India Office to urge, in the interest of trade, that the Government should take steps for establishing more satisfactory relations with the Burmese Government. Sir W. M'Arthur, M.P., introduced the deputation and presented a memorial, which was supported by Mr. S. S. Gladstone (Calcutta), Mr. Garnet Mann, Mr. Paterson, Mr. R. Gladstone, Mr. C. W. Anderson, and Mr. Holt Hallett. Most of the speakers advocated annexation as the best means of solving the difficulty. The Earl of Kimberley in reply said he was glad to have the opinions of so influential a body of gentlemen on the subject. He would state at the outset that it had been determined not to annex Upper Burma, and this decision Lord Dufferin would probably have made known to some memorialists who had sent a representation to him through the Commissioner to Burma, Mr. Barnard. He would not dispute the causes which might have influenced the course of trade in Burma, as the deputation were better acquainted with those causes than he could possibly be; but he was told that it would be scarcely fair to attribute the depression entirely to the state of affairs in Upper Burma. The large amount of unprofitable speculation on the rice crops in 1882 and 1883, the short crop of 1884, and the great fall in the price of tea must all have contributed to bring about the state of depression which now undoubtedly did exist.

THE COSTLINESS OF INDIAN ADMINISTRATION.—At a meeting of the East India Association, held yesterday afternoon, at the Council Room, Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Mr. H. D. Macfarlane, M.P., a paper was read by Mr. R. Brown, of Glasgow, on the above subject. He said that no one would deny that India had been a gainer materially and morally by British domination; but a sound financial basis was essential to the safety of the whole national superstructure, and India unfortunately would not stand that test. In the forty-four yearly budgets, from 1840 to 1883, there had been sixteen surpluses, while the twenty-eight deficits tabled up a balance of £53,920,000 on the wrong side. In 1811 the debt was but £27,979,134, against £159,112,939 in 1883, the annual interest having risen from £1,623,646 to £6,515,349. The total amount for which India was liable was £246,948,000, the difference representing railways and public works which were remunerative. Dealing, then, with these charges and Indian expenditure numerous illustrations of gross extravagance were cited in the home charges, the expenditure in India, and in the army administration; and Mr. Brown urged that while the cost of government is at all times a question of interest closely connected with the prosperity, comfort, and happiness of the people, there was additional ground for closely scrutinising and economising the cost of Indian administration, inasmuch as the people affected have no say in it, and the necessary funds are provided with difficulty, and only with the aid of a substantial supplement from a demoralising trade forced upon another nation. In the home expenditure, for which enormous drafts were made on the Indian Government, there was scarcely one item which we would venture to charge a power that could give effect to a protest; while in all other directions it was fully time that we acted more in accordance with our theory, "Indian money only on Indian business."—In the course of a discussion which followed there was general agreement with the views of the opener. The proceedings closed with the customary vote of thanks.

NOTICES, MEETINGS, DIVIDENDS. &c.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.—An extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders will be held at 81 and 83, Gresham-street on the 9th inst., at 2 P.M.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA AND CHINA.—At the annual meeting on April 15th the directors will recommend that a dividend be declared at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum (free of income-tax), carrying forward £7,940. To meet losses incurred during the year the sum of £50,000 has been transferred from Reserve Fund, which now stands at £200,000.

MAURITIUS LAND, CREDIT AND AGENCY COMPANY.—The directors in their report for the year ended December 31st, 1884, adopted at the general meeting, state that £4,500 has been added to reserve, making it £40,500. An interim dividend of 3s. per share was paid in September last, and a similar payment for the past half-year will now be made, making a total of 15 per cent. for the year, leaving a balance of £9,647 to be carried forward to next account. The same dividend was paid for 1883.

EASTERN EXTENSION (AUSTRALASIA AND CHINA) TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The directors state that the accounts to December 31st last show a profit of £110,126, after payment of three interim dividends and a bonus of 2s. per share for the first half year, and charging £42,767, against revenue during the year on account of cable renewals. They now propose to pay on April 30th the usual dividend of 2s. 6d. per share, together with a bonus of 2s. per share, making with previous distributions a total payment of 7 per cent. for the year 1884. The balance of £33,876 has been carried to the reserve fund, which now stands at £510,649. The total distribution for 1883 was 7 per cent., and £50,076 was carried to the reserve.

ORIENTAL BANK.—The Times is informed that a requisition has been signed by many of the largest shareholders asking the Official Liquidator to convene a meeting to consider a scheme for the formation of an Assets Company, its purpose being to acquire, either by auction or by negotiation with the Official Liquidator, any assets which promise great improvement in value, but which require in the meantime to be the subject of outlay. This scheme may enable the shareholders to recover a material portion of their lost capital, which, in the absence of such an arrangement, seems irrevocably gone. The Official Liquidator estimates that the ordinary course of winding-up will give the creditors less than 20s. in the pound.

NIZAM'S STATE RAILWAYS.—The report for the year ended December 31st, 1884, adopted at the general meeting, states that the company has paid to the Government of his Highness the whole of the purchase-money for the existing railway from Wado to Secunderabad, and the concessions of the new lines, retaining £200,000 for the guarantee fund. An important modification of the agreement was made in favour of the company by the Government consenting to take in part payment £241,600 in the company's debentures instead of cash, "with a view to further assisting the operations of the company." On December 31st, 1884, there was a balance in hand of £307,428, including the £200,000 retained for the guarantee fund. At the date of the report 66,297 shares are fully paid-up, including the 25,000 shares held by the Government. The gross traffic receipts of the line in the year 1884 were approximately £96,450. The net earnings are not yet known.

OBITUARY.

THE HON. GEORGE C. GERALD O'CALLAGHAN, only son of Viscount and Vicountess Lismore, died last week in the Red Sea, on his voyage home from India. The deceased was born in November, 1846, and married 24th December, 1874, Rosina, daughter of the late Rev. W. H. W. Williams, and widow of Mr. Edward C. Follett.

MAJOR-GENERAL H. CADOGAN CRAIGIE, late Lieutenant-Colonel of the 19th Hussars, aged fifty-four. The deceased, who entered the service in 1848, served in the 3rd Bengal Light Infantry in the Punjab campaign of 1849, and was present at the battle of Goojerat. As captain he raised and commanded a regiment of Irregular Horse under the orders of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, from May, 1857, to January, 1858, during the Indian Mutiny.

Correspondence.

THE DEFENCE OF THE EMPIRE.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—One lesson taught us by the Mutiny of 1857 was the necessity of holding fast our grasp on the province of Behar in order to retain India.

If we should lose Behar we must for a time give up Allahabad, and all of the North-Western Provinces. The hill stations of Simla, Mussoorie, and Nynce Tal would become but traps to catch governors and councillors and heads of departments, who may be held as hostages by rebels.

In former days we considered that a military force at Dinapoor, on the Ganges, was sufficient for the protection of the whole of Behar, both east and west of the Sone river. We forgot that the Ponwars, or as they were called the Bhojpooria Rajpoots, were far stronger than we were in the Shahabad district, the capital of which is Arrah. The actual chief of the Ponwars was Konwr Singh, the nominal chief, the Rajah of Doonraon exercising very little influence.

A party of English soldiers, sent from Dinapoor to relieve Arrah, suffered a disastrous defeat; but Sir Vincent Eyre from the west was successful.

Most of our reinforcements from Calcutta were despatched to Benares by the Grand Trunk Road through Sherghotty, east of the Sone river. The Grand Trunk Road is still a great military work, though apparently neglected by Government. If disturbances should break out its importance will be at once manifested, and the necessity of improving the communications through Sherghotty will be admitted. At present the destruction of any part of the railway between Buxar and Arrah would paralyse us.

Consider for one moment the necessity of connecting Calcutta with Sherghotty by railway. The Indian Bradshaw informs us, in page 390, that the East Indian Railway through Muddapoor and Giridi-Kurhurballee, 206 miles in length, is open: an extension from Kurhurballee to Sherghotty through Gooma (24° 25', 85° 35'), avoiding any crossing of the Barakur river, with its treacherous bed, would be 101 miles in length. Total distance by rail from Calcutta to Sherghotty, 307 miles. The only difficulty would be the nine-mile descent from Chouparun to Bhaluwa.

Another railway can be easily made from the Ganges, and has been proposed in the Railway Report. From Patna and Bankipoor a railway has been already constructed to Gya, 57 miles, see page 394 of Bradshaw. An extension of only twenty miles would complete the line to Sherghotty, from the latter place to Moghulserai and the city of Benares a tramway could be cheaply laid down on the Grand Trunk Road, and the Sone river might be crossed on the top of the new aicut, which is 8 feet high and 12,500 feet in length.

In page 13 of the Railway Report, received last month, you will read the desire of Government to construct a railway from Sherghotty to Palamon. The officers of Government (para. 14) admit that on this line the only trading towns are Daltongunge and Ranigunge. Your readers will look in maps in vain for Ranigunge, which is near Eemangunge (15 miles south-west of Sherghotty), to which place there will be no objection to make a tramway when we have plenty of money.—Your obedient servant,
March 26th. T.

RUSSIA, THE AMEER, AND THE AFGHAN BARRIER.

LECTURE BY CHARLES MARVIN.

On Friday last, March 27, a lecture was delivered by Mr. Charles Marvin before a crowded meeting of the Balloon Society, at Westminster, on "Russia, the Ameer, and the Afghan Barrier." The room was crowded, and several hundred people turned away for want of space. Admiral Hobart Pacha was to have presided, but was prevented by a severe cold. Captain Molesworth, in consequence, took the chair. In the course of his remarks he expressed a hope that the audience would excuse any shortcomings on the part of the lecturer, who had only just accomplished the remarkable feat of writing and printing a book of 200 pages—"The Russians at the Gates of Herat"—in eight days, and was not unnaturally in a somewhat exhausted condition.

MR. CHARLES MARVIN said: Mr. Chairman, Ladies, and Gentlemen: One hundred and fifty years ago the people of this country, who are now doing their utmost to prevent the Russians from getting to India from the Caspian Sea, were themselves mad with the idea of doing the very same thing. The opening up of a highway to India via Afghanistan was the talk of every enterprising City merchant of the time. To secure the monopoly of the trade quite a battle royal was fought, and when the Russia Company finally won it, everybody envied those who had any connection with that prosperous corporation. The development of the new route to India, which your rulers have been doing their best for a generation to blockade, received the solemn assent of his blessed Majesty George II., and I daresay that the charter he signed still exists somewhere or other in this great metropolis.

You may ask why I should have taken the trouble to unearth this fact from musty old tomes in my possession. You did not come here to-night to listen to ancient history. You expected piping hot politics. Well, if you will have patience for a few moments you will realise, if you are the true descendants of the Englishmen of George II.'s time, what a paltry five-farthing obstacle this Afghan barrier is. When our merchants freighted ships, and, via St. Petersburg, Moscow, and the River Volga, sent their merchandise to the Caspian Sea, bound for India, the barrier between the Russian Empire and India was indeed a barrier in every sense of the word. The Russian forepost was Astrakhan, at the mouth of the Volga—the Caspian was a Persian Gulf; from there to India the whole country seethed with despotism and misrule, savage tribes harried every highway of communication, and finally in India itself the English were still inferior to the French, and Clive had not commenced that amazing career of conquest destined to give you that great Empire, which, if you are the true countrymen of Clive, Russia shall never take from you. Now, just see what Jonas Hanway and other merchants had to do when they got to the Caspian Sea. From Astrakhan, the Russian forepost, to our few trading settlements at Calcutta, the entire distance was 3,700 miles. That might fairly be called a barrier; but it was not so to Englishmen 150 years ago. The Caspian had been first surveyed for Russia by Englishmen, Englishmen had built the first Russian ships in the sea, and they were not to be deterred by 3,700 miles of turbulent country from pushing their way to India. Well, at the present moment, forgetting all this, England, although the pushing enterprising Russians at the gates of Herat are only 549 miles from the English outposts on the hills dominating Candahar, and although the road is so level that a Russian could drive a four-in hand from his outposts to our own, England still talks seriously of such a thing as an Afghan barrier.

One hundred and fifty years ago it was a great journey to get to that barrier alone. When the Russia Company planned their trade operations they had to allow 120 days for merchandise to go from St. Petersburg to the Caspian. Troops can now be sent thither from the Russian capital in a week. In India we ourselves have moved from Calcutta right across the Peninsula to Quetta, 2,000 miles, and the whole of this distance is, or will be when the Quetta line is finished, covered by a railway. Thus, if we calculate the distance from Astrakhan to the gates of Herat at nearly 1,200 miles, we arrive at these results. Of the great barrier, 3,700 miles broad, which your forefathers in the reign of George II. had to traverse to get from the Russian outposts to our own settlements, we have moved 2,000 miles towards Russia and covered it with railway, and Russia has moved 1,200 miles towards India, and also equipped the route for the most part with steam communication. All that is now left of the old barrier is some 500 odd miles, and I question whether that will survive the present complications.

The commercial operations of the Russia Company ended in failure, and no serious attempt was made to get to India from the Caspian until after the last Turkish war. In 1869 the Russians first commenced their military operations at Krasnovodsk, but we may say that they kept to the coast, and did nothing serious until Skobeleff came thither in 1880 armed with full power to crush the Turcoman barrier. From 1880, the year the Afghans gave you such a thrashing at Maiwind, practically dates the Russian movement from the Caspian in the direction of Herat and India.

Previous to this the advance lay through Turkestan, from Orenburg across the Kirghiz deserts and Central Asian Khanates to Cabul. That, I would point out, is a totally different movement, and must not be mixed up with the advance proceedings from the Caspian. Half of the bad statesmanship of England has arisen from mixing up the two. The troops have been always different, the officials different, and conditions regulating the advance different. We have only to specify one popular error to show how essential it is that the public should clearly realise the difference between the two movements. For instance, it is often said that colossal mountain ranges bar the Russian advance to the Indian frontier. This is quite true as regards troops marching from Tashkent and Samarcand upon Cabul and Peshawur. The lofty Hindoo Koosh, that must be traversed to reach the Ameer's capital, ranges in height from 15,000 to 20,000 feet. But there is nothing of the kind between the Caspian and Herat, nor yet again between Herat and the Indo-Afghan frontier. Setting out from the Caspian Sea at Krasnovodsk a Russian could drive a dogcart all the way to the Indian frontier near Quetta.

If this fact be clearly borne in mind you will readily understand why the Russian advance has been so rapid since Skobelev broke down the Turcoman barrier, and will appreciate how essential it is that the disadvantage of there being no physical obstacle to a powerful military movement from the Caspian should not be enhanced by allowing Russia to secure the great midway camping-ground of Herat.

The Emperor of Russia rules one hundred million subjects: the Queen controls in India two hundred and fifty millions. Between the two Empires lies the Afghan barrier.

Now what is this Afghan barrier? To the majority of Englishmen it is a vast mountainous region, extremely inaccessible, and peopled throughout with fierce tribes averse to any intercourse with the Feringhi. To conquer it would be a task equal to the Russian conquest of the Caucasus. To attempt commercial intercourse would be to expose England to the risk of having to perpetually avenge brutal murders. For Russia to try to march an army into any part of the Ameer's dominions would be to involve her in those disasters and losses which marked our last Afghan War. If given to strife among themselves, the people are welded together by a common feeling of patriotism against the attacks of outsiders. Irreclaimably cruel, they are best left alone; and even if Russia tore her way through the tribesmen, and broke the Ameer's levies, England could confront the wearied and mauled invaders in the Khyber and Bolan Passes, and effectually check an inrush into India—(hear, hear. "So it is").

Thus, to the view of most Englishmen, Afghanistan is a material as well as a moral barrier. To my view it is neither—(hear, hear, and laughter).

As I have been insisting for years, there is only one possible solution of the Central Asian Question. If the Russian advance is to be permanently arrested, we must confront the Cossack with the Sikh. Unless we move up to Russia, Russia will move down upon India. There can be no permanent zone maintained between the two empires.

We shall see what a breakable barrier this Afghanistan is, if we look at a few plain facts plainly. All I ask, at the outset, is that you look at them with your own eyes, and not through the spectacles of 1842 or 1878; nor yet, again, through the lenses of political old fogeys, or, worse still, of mere party hacks, who, because they or their leaders expressed such and such opinions five, ten, or twenty years ago—would rather see the Empire perish than change them.

The Russians are posted at the gates of Herat; the English are posted on the hills dominating the avenues to Candahar. Between them lies the Afghan barrier.

That barrier, physically, is of such a character that, as I have said, the Russians could drive a four-in-hand from their own Cossack outposts to ours, and, during the 549 miles' ride, they would pass only two towns on the road—Herat with 50,000, and Candahar with 60,000 people. There are bad roads in Afghanistan, but they do not lie between the Russians and the English. There are fierce tribes, but they lie the thinnest between the Tsar's soldiers and the Queen's. There are patriotic Afghans, but the least sentimental, and the most amenable to European influence, lie between the Cossack and the Sikh. There are fearful mountains, but they do not lie along the road I mention. Horrible deserts exist, but in this case the most fertile parts of Afghanistan mark the route. In one word, there is no barrier at all between the Russians and the English, except such as we ourselves may try and create, and interpose to check the advance of the Cossack.

Let me put the matter more plainly in the shape of a parable.

A certain man stood at the junction of two roads; one, a level railway, along which, in the distance, could be seen a locomotive advancing; and the other a winding post road which disappeared over a lofty hill. Seeing him standing on the metals, people shouted to the man to beware of the advancing train. But the man refused to look along the line; he kept his gaze fixed on the old post road, and replied, "I can see no stage-coach coming over the mountain; I don't believe in your warnings." And so he stood obstinately on the metals, refusing to move, until the train came up and cut him to pieces.

Such has been the attitude of England and her statesmen in regard to the Russian advance upon India. That advance was formerly through Orenburg and the deserts of Central Asia. When English statesmen looked in those days towards the advancing Cossack, they gazed at Cabul and the lofty Hindoo Koosh in its rear. There was a barrier then. But since 1869 the Russians have been advancing in another direction. They have been rattling along the almost level road from the Caspian to Candahar. Still, with woful perversity, English statesmen have refused to divert their gaze from the old mountain road, and have kept looking at Cabul, when they ought to have been watching Herat. To-day, they are beginning to glance in the right direction, but unless they rid themselves of all the old-fashioned notions about the Afghans and the Afghan barrier, the Russians will smash their way into India—(hear, hear).

In discussing the Russo-Indian question, politicians frequently quote the opinions expressed by Wellington in 1842, and by Lawrence and others in 1860-70, when Russia was conquering the deserts of Turkestan. They might just as well quote the Talmud. All the conditions have changed since those opinions were expressed; everything has been turned topsy-turvy in Afghanistan and Central Asia, and the authorities cited for passing party purposes by shallow politicians would be the first to disown the erroneous application of those opinions if they were alive to-day.

To the Russian official or officer who has made the journey of 3,000 miles to get from St. Petersburg to the gates of Herat, what is the trumpery 549 miles of easy road intervening between him and the Pishin outposts? The Herat-Candahar region may be a barrier to politicians who have passed their lives in babble and barleycorn measurements, but to Russians, accustomed to think no more of a thousand miles' journey than the Londoner does of a bus ride to the Bank, the distance separating the Cossack from India is grotesquely insignificant.

The defect of the Afghan barrier is this—that it is weakest where it ought to be most strong; and we can only remedy that defect by taking the organisation of the defence into our own hands. In plainer words, we ourselves must hold the gates of Herat.

All discussions about the return to Candahar are beside the mark. We can occupy Candahar whenever we like, and we need not concern ourselves about its security. The whole of our efforts must be concentrated upon the safeguarding of Herat.

We must make sure of the bulwarks of Afghanistan. The question of the inner defences can be settled at our leisure afterwards.

To hear some people talk, the installation of an Indian garrison at Herat would appear to be the most difficult task that has ever tested the resources of our Empire. As a matter of fact, an army concentrated at Pishin would simply have to march 400 odd miles to get to Herat, and that by a broad waggon road. To a nation that has just sent, in face of fearful obstacles, a force from Cairo to Khartoum (1,500 miles), such an expedition should be relatively a commonplace enterprise. Ten thousand Indian troops, aided by tribal levies, would be all that would be needed for the moment to safeguard the Key of India. The real difficulty consists, not in getting those troops there, but in making sure that Russia will not issue an ultimatum forbidding their advance.

Since Russia seized the gates of Herat, the St. Petersburg press has repeatedly of late intimated that she would not allow us to occupy and garrison the Key of India. These opinions have been treated somewhat heedlessly by the English press. They have regarded them simply as ravings of irresponsible journalists. But knowing what I do of the aims and declarations of Russian statesmen, I cannot but think that the threats of the Russian press possess a very serious significance. In my mind I am persuaded, that if we allow this frontier complication to simmer until Russia masses at Sarakhs and Merv and the gates of Herat a more powerful army than Lumsden and the Afghans control for the defence of the Key of India, she will suddenly throw off the mask and deny our right to send a force thither. Hence, if there is to be any advance for the defence of Herat, it must be done without delay—(loud applause).

I have said that, physically, the Afghan barrier between the Herat-Russians and Quetta-English is so devoid of mountain ranges and great rivers as to be no barrier at all. Let me now touch upon the ethnographical and political obstacles. You are hearing a good deal just now from the pro-Russian party about turbulent tribes, and the necessity for Russia to have a solid frontier to put them in order. All this argumentative stuff I would divide into two portions—one half consists of lies, the other half of nonsense.

Take Herat as a starting point. The city contains 60,000 people, and right and left of it villages dot the valley, prosperous, quiet and orderly, and reminding some of the English officers there of the country at home. No one disputes that the Herat valley is very quiet; the turbulent tribes lie north of it between it and the line of Russian outposts. Let us go through the series. First there are the Salor Turcomans. Russia, you know, claims the whole of the West Badghies district, or the country lying between the Paropamisus Downs and Puli-Khatun because of this tribe. Well, this tribe does not dwell there at all, but at Zurabad, in Persian territory. It only consists of 3,000 or 4,000 families, exceedingly poor; and has not, I believe—I speak, guided by Russian facts—perpetrated a single raid for a quarter of a century. Lessar says, Russia must have the Western gates at Herat, because the Salor Turcomans require pasture land for their cattle. A year ago he gave a lecture in St. Petersburg, in which he said the Salors had scarcely any cattle at all—(laughter). However, I am not here to-night to discuss Russia's claims. My answer to them is to be found on every bookstall, and you can read it at your leisure. What I want to insist upon now is, that this district north-west of Herat is not occupied by any tribesmen, or used to any extent, if at all, for pasturage purposes by the Salor Turcomans, and that, therefore, we may declare it to be safe for English troops to live in, and quite open to the Russian advance. The next tribe, the Sarik Turcomans, dwelling in and about Penjdeh, between the Russian Murghab outposts and Herat. There are 8,000 families, and they were once great raiders, but have completely settled down to agricultural pursuits, and do not now even carry weapons. You may think the change temporary, but it is not. All the old turbulence in the region was due to the quarrels between the tribes. The Merv Tekkes attacked the Sariks, and the latter retaliated. But, as you know, it takes two to make a quarrel. When Russia occupied Merv, the Merv Tekkes left off attacking the Sariks, and the Sariks in turn left off attacking the Mervs. So, you see, the country became quiet at a stroke. In Merv, the Turcomans under the Russians are becoming mere peasants, and you have only to read the letters from the spot in the Daily News and Times to find that this has been the case with the Sariks under the Afghans. Controlling the Penjdeh district is the Afghan fort of Ak Tepé, with seventeen guns, so that even if the Sariks were turbulent, which they are not, they could be checked in a moment by the Ameer's forces.

I have given special prominence to these two tribes, because Russia says that she must have all the gates of Herat because of them. In the one case I have shown that the Salors do not raid and do not live in Afghanistan at all, beyond a few scattered families, and in the other the Sariks have settled as unarmed peasants and give no cause for complaint. There are really the only two turbulent frontier tribes, because the rest are either already pacified, or else dwell away from the frontier altogether.

The Jemshidis, for instance, belong to the pacified list. They number 12,000 families and dwell in villages between Penjdeh and Herat. To the right of them are the Feruzkois, 30,000 families, who, I believe, have never raided across the district held or claimed by Russia, and, at any rate, have never been accused by Russians of doing such. These are also well under the Ameer's control. Further east we have the whole of Afghan Turkestan, the country lying between the Hindoo Koosh and the Oxus. There are no turbulent tribes on the frontier there, and the towns stretching from Penjdeh to Balkh are garrisoned by Afghans.

As I have said, there are ferocious tribes in Afghanistan, for you have not forgotten how they ripped up and cut the throats of your soldiers in the last Afghan war; but these tribes, I would point out, do not dwell on Russia's frontier, but on yours. In other words, all the mild and pacified tribes of Afghanistan dwell between Herat and the Russians, whilst the worst dwell between the Indian frontier and Cabul. To put the matter plainly—and be it remembered that I speak not only by the light of English letters from the spot, but from the statements of Russians also—so quiet and so safe is the Russo-Afghan frontier, that I would undertake to convey the whole British House of Commons along it from Persia to the Oxus without having to have recourse to a single measure of protection or defence. Consequently, if a line of frontier guards were placed by England from Persia to the Oxus at Khoja Saleh, there would be no fear of any tribal attacks on either side of the line, while I am in a position to state in the most authoritative manner that our relations with the Afghan tribes in the vicinity of Herat are such that even if any disturbances took place at Cabul we could rely upon their support, even against the Afghans.

Between Herat and the Persian frontier and south of Herat are the Aimaks, 350,000 in number, all quiet and well in hand. We are on the best relations with these. Between them and Candahar is the only section of country that must be marked doubtful for dwellers. Along the road are a few Afghan tribesmen, at present fanatically disposed towards us, although easily amenable to influence if we buy over their chiefs. But the recent journey of the Indian contingent to Herat has demonstrated that there is no necessity for passing through their country at all. A good road, fit for a railway, lies outside it from the Helmund to Herat, supposing we decided not to occupy Candahar, and if we did, and made the railway through their country, they would doubtless become as quickly pacified as those bloodthirsty brutes near Quetta who, although only a few years ago they were notorious for cutting your soldiers' throats, now share in their sports in the most amiable and innocent manner.

The Afghan barrier, therefore, resolves itself into this—that the whole of the country between the Russians and ourselves is open and provided with easy roads, and that with the exception of a small section close to Candahar the whole of it is either unpopulated or possessed by tribes, or rather clans of peasants, who are quiet and orderly, and would not interfere with commerce. Practically speaking, it is no barrier at all.

Now I want to impress upon you a very great fact. In the whole of the country between the Hindoo Koosh and Oxus the Afghan is a foreigner, and the people, who are Uzbeks, hate him. In Herat and about Herat again the Afghan is almost a foreigner, and the Ameer's rule is only respected so long as he can maintain it. Thus, although the Sarik Turcomans, the Jemshedis, the Aimaks, and Hazaras, and the Uzbeks are at present quiet and orderly, and do not contest the Ameer's rule, it would be the easiest thing in the world for Russia, from her new position, to stir up and cause them to revolt in succession against Abdurrahman Khan. That I take to be a very distressing circumstance if we do not control the frontier in person, because it forces us to recognise that even if we give Russia all she demands we have no guarantee that she will not advance further. But the case is totally different if we man the new frontier with troops. We then take up the rôle Russia would play—that of sympathiser against the Afghans. Consequently, supposing we subsequently quarrelled with the Ameer, all those tribes, or the majority, would be on our side against him, and our cordon, all the way from Beluchistan to the Oxus, would be upheld and screened from attack.

Before Sir Peter Lumsden proceeded to Herat he observed to me in a conversation, "I have read many books on Central Asia, but they seem to all possess one defect; they do not lay down a definite policy." To that, I replied, my books contain all the elements of a policy, but to publish a plan is to place in the Russian's hands the means of frustrating it. However, after he had left England, I endeavoured to obtain adhesion among men of power in this country and India to a plan I had already formulated, and which was this:—that from the base we possess on our own territory of Beluchistan we should extend a thin chain of outposts up the Perso-Afghan frontier to the Russian dominions, and then along the Russo-Persian frontier to the Oxus at Khoja Saleh. The Turkestan frontier, I thought, could be left untouched for the moment. As the whole line of frontier passed through uninhabited or sparsely populated country, the chain of posts would not require many men, as there was very little fear of tribal attack, while for its support we could draw levies from the Hazaras, Sariks, and Uzbeks, and other tribes non-Afghan, and devoid of Afghan sentiment. As those tribes are numerically stronger than the Afghans it will be seen that my proposed cordon had all the elements of unobtrusive strength, while we might hope in time, with the Ameer's consent, to run on a railway to Herat, and render it perfect. Such was my plan, and my idea was that Sir Peter Lumsden's party should form the nucleus of the cordon at the outset.

Against this were various obstacles—the unknown temper of the tribes, of the Ameer, and of the people of Herat, all of which have been swept away by Russia's aggressive policy. That policy has given the country the means of thoroughly realising my plan, for to-day we pose as the Ameer's string.

Unless we do this, the corrosion of trade intercourse will rapidly wear the weaker portion away. For instance, the Russians claim the Sarek Turcomans. Well, the Sariks mix and trade with the Jemshidis, and the latter with the people of Herat. Do you imagine that even if an amicable settlement be arrived at, the Russian traders, Armenians, and others, will not be spreading over the whole of West Afghanistan? For centuries there has been constant intercourse between Afghanistan and Central Asia, videlicet Merv; and the only way to prevent political influence and intrigue following the trader is to organise the frontier and control the intercourse. I do not say you will prevent intrigue even then, but you will do one thing—you will prevent the Alikhanoff's following it up with the Cossack.

It should be clearly understood that for the present I would place no residents at Cabul, nor yet would I advocate an occupation of Candahar if the Ameer were averse to it. We would tie the frontier cordon to a fort on the Helmund by a chain of posts running between it and Herat, and as soon as possible connect it by a railway with Quetta. What we want is this, to safeguard Afghanistan as thoroughly as possible without touching the purely Afghan frontier, or, in other words, to build up the defence of the weak part of the Afghan barrier, while leaving the Ameer himself to rule the strong. Russia has repeatedly promised to respect the integrity of Afghanistan, but English statesmen are everlastingly forgetting that she has also said that she will only respect that integrity if the Ameer keeps his subjects in order. That declaration seems to me to throw upon England the necessity for assuming control of the Afghan frontier; otherwise it is certain as can be that even if a peaceful settlement be arrived at, Russia will afterwards eat her way into Afghanistan.

The advance of the Russian locomotive is another factor hostile to the preservation of a zone between the two countries. The Russians have decided to extend their line to Sarakhs, or within 202½ miles of Herat; and I believe it is no longer a secret that if they persist in doing this the Government have made up their minds to carry their Pishin line either to Candahar, and even closer to Herat. Now, even if Russia goes no further than Askabad, and we no further than Pishin—both of which sections are now in hand—all that will be wanted will be something like £4,000,000 sterling to unite Europe and India by railway; while if Russia pushes on to Sarakhs, and we reciprocate her movement, the sum will be only £2,000,000. Now, I ask you, as possessors of common sense, whether you believe that, when this frontier affair is over, it will be possible to keep long unclosed this tiny gap of 500 miles between the railway system of Europe and the railway system of India? Just reflect for a moment. By the end of another year, or even less, perhaps, it will be in the power of humanity to have a direct railway route to India, from Calais to Calcutta, by simply spending £2,000,000 sterling, to traverse the Afghan barrier. Well, I don't know what you think; but I am persuaded that when this comes to pass the world will shove down the Afghan barrier pretty sharp. As a matter of fact, there is hardly a doubt that, within a few short years, English people will be going to India comfortably by railway, via Berlin, South Russia, Vladikavkaz, Petrovsk, Michaelovsk, Askabad, Herat, and Candahar, in nine or ten days.

So that you see that this frontier business is something more than a mere fixing of the border line. The Russian advance has already broken down Afghan exclusiveness, which was the only barrier, and we find Sir Peter Lumsden directing the defence of the frontier as if it were England's own property. And so it should be, I say. We should lease it from the Ameer, organise and guard it, and treat it in cold common fact what it has long been in vague diplomatic theory—the real frontier of India. So long as England calls it the Afghan frontier, and leaves it to Afghans to defend, so long will Russia subject it to aggression and attack. Change its name to the Russo-Indian frontier, and confide its keeping to English officers, and we shall have no more repetitions of the swoop upon the gates of Herat.

To sum up—although there may be such a thing as an Afghan barrier between the Russians at Samarcand and the English at the mouth of the Khyber there is absolutely none, physically, ethnographically, or morally, between the Russians at the gates of Herat and the English at the gates of Candahar. We must, therefore, set up a screen in North-West Afghanistan to keep the Russians in check in time of peace. I am not speaking without the guidance of the best military experts when I say that this could be done with 10,000 Indian troops, now uselessly cantoned in India—and in the event of war we should be certainly better prepared than we are now to defend the barrier from aggression. At present we are on the wrong side of the barrier; then we should be on the right, and we should be able to organise on the spot all the means of defence we should require against Russia.

That is my policy, and that is the policy England will have to adopt, whatever may be the issue of the present complications. It contains no menace to Russia, it provides an effectual screen for Afghanistan, without tampering with the independence of the Ameer, and it puts a stop once and for all time to any further advance in the direction of India. If Russia annexes Khorassan and its capital, Meshed, which is as certain in the immediate future as any event can possibly be, the new movement will find the Perso-Afghan frontier from Pul-i-Khatun to Beluchistan already defined and organised, and we shall be spared any repetition of the present complications. By manning the Russo-Afghan frontier with Indian troops we virtually extinguish the Russo-Indian question, and enable ourselves to watch with complacency what we cannot possibly prevent—the opening up of direct railway communication between Europe and India, the complete revolution in Central Asia and Afghanistan that will be occasioned by giving the world a shorter and quicker route to India than that via Egypt.

The only real obstacle to that policy is the opposition of Russia, and so much do I appreciate what she can do to frustrate it that were not this country almost now practically committed to it I should have hesitated giving publicity to my ideas this evening. If you do not know the weak points of the Afghan barrier Russia does, and she is quick to take any suggestions that may promote her advance. Only a year ago I declared in this room, unless England immediately closed up the Afghan frontier to Sarakhs Russia would infallibly move from Sarakhs up to Penjdeh and other gates of Herat. Now, Russia had not commenced the movement then, nor had she the means of doing so; but England dawdled, and Russia did exactly what I foretold she would do. And if you live five years hence and do not organise the northern Afghan border, I shall live to tell you that the Russians hold Herat, and that your tenure of India is dependent on the humour of their Emperor—(loud and prolonged applause).

Commander LOVETT CAMERON, R.N., C.B., then moved the resolution:—"That this meeting is of opinion that whatever may be the issue of the present negotiations, the best way to adequately safeguard the Afghan barrier from Russian aggression and intrigue is to establish a cordon of Indian troops along the west and north-western frontiers from Beluchistan to the Oxus, and connect Herat with India by a railway." In an able and vigorous speech he dilated on the strategical significance of the Hari Rud and Tigris, and urged that we should take timely steps on both to counteract the Russian advance.

Dr. BADENOCH supported the resolution; and was followed by Mr. EDMUND KIMBER and Colonel PARKER GILMORE in the same strain.

Dr. CLARKE moved, as an amendment, the adoption of the Indus as the frontier; but the feeling of the meeting was strongly against him and Mr. Martin Wood, and it received no support. The resolution was then carried, with only three dissentients.

The following resolution, framed by Mr. Marvin, was then proposed in an eloquent speech by Mr. EDMUND KIMBER and agreed to:—"That this meeting wishes to express its sympathies with Sir Peter Lumsden and his colleagues safeguarding Herat, and to assure them of the cordial approval with which their firm and vigorous attitude is regarded by the public." A vote of thanks was afterwards voted to the lecturer and chairman.

A large number of officers were present at the meeting, including General Smythe, the commandant at Woolwich. There were also several Russians, and science was represented by the eminent ethnologist Professor, A. H. Keane.

BENGAL, UPPER INDIA, &c.

IN the course of the debate on the Tenancy Bill the Viceroy protested against written speeches.

It is believed that the official rate of exchange for the coming financial year will probably be 1s. 7d. per rupee, or worse.

GREAT activity is apparent in Calcutta in hurrying to completion the mounting of the heavy ordnance for the defence of the Hooghly.

ON Wednesday, the 11th inst., the Rev. Mr. Hastie, the defendant in the celebrated Calcutta mission defamation case, was released from prison pending the adjournment of his application in insolvency.

MR. PALMER, late Auditor of the Calcutta District Charitable Association, has been committed to the sessions for abetting Tulsi Dass, the late cashier, in his frauds.

AFTER a long and animated discussion at the Bengal Legislative Council on Saturday, the 7th inst., it was resolved that the report of the Select Committee on the Bill authorising the construction of new docks at Calcutta should be taken into consideration.

THE Viceroy inspected the Calcutta Volunteers on March 7, and in the course of some remarks said he was sure the Volunteers would respond with alacrity to the call for defending the peace of the country when the regular soldiers were employed in the field.

THE Bengal Tenancy Bill was passed by the Viceregal Legislative Council on Wednesday, the 11th inst., after a debate extending over several days. The Viceroy spoke at some length, defending the Government from the charge of exercising undue haste in pushing the measure through the Council.

GENERAL ROBERTS returned to Calcutta on the 5th inst., from his shooting trip to Cooch Behar. The party bagged in three days one tiger, one tigress, one rhinoceros, and five buffaloes. His Excellency was to leave Calcutta on Thursday, and goes to Agra, Delhi, Mooltan, and then to Pindi camp.

THE North-West Elephant Kheddah has wound up well, making a catch of nine elephants after a chase of fully forty miles on the 3rd, when operations came to an end. The total catch was forty-four, of which thirty-six are alive. The Maharaja's best season was twenty-nine.

THE Hindu Patriot hears that several energetic natives of Bengal are ready to go on active service in the Sudan if there is any chance of their services being availed of. Our contemporary adds:—"This, though practically of not much moment, speaks volumes about the loyalty and devotion of our young men to the British cause."

THE Maharajah of Burdwan, who has been dangerously ill at the palace, Burdwan, was successfully operated upon for abscess of the liver on Friday by Doctors Purves and McConnell, who have been for some time in attendance upon him. The Maharajah is already better, and is making slow but satisfactory progress.

THE results of the examination for the lower division Government of India Secretariat clerkships are published in the Gazette of India. Of the thirty successful candidates seven were Europeans or Eurasians, and the remainder natives. The list is headed by Mr. A. J. Hypher and Mr. Alfred H. Peters, who made 1,469 and 1,440 marks respectively, out of a possible 2,000.

ACCOUNTS reach the Pioneer of the Mahdi's emissaries being busy in various large towns in the upper provinces. There are at this moment, says our contemporary, two such emissaries, Arabs, accompanied by two moulvis from Delhi, in a town not a hundred miles from Lahore. It is sufficient to add that they are working under the eyes of the police, who are perhaps acting under judicious instructions in not making too much of the men. But to some it will seem that an asylum within the four walls of the city jail, with the treadmill at hand as a vent to their superfluous energies, would simplify the process of surveillance.

MOFUSSIL NOTES.

(From the Indian Planters' Gazette.)

THERE is not the slightest foundation for the rumour that H.H. the Maharaja of Durbhunga intends visiting England this year.

MR. R. S. RUTH, late Executive Engineer at Hajepore, has taken over charge of the Motiharree-Betteah extension of the Tirhoot State Railway, relieving Mr. Willcox, who has gone on leave.

SOWING is pretty general now throughout the indigo concerns in Tirhoot, but the nights are still cold, and blight must be feared for the young plant wherever moisture is excessive and in low lands.

ALL factories in Purneah are now pushing on sowings, and the earlier sowings are germinating well. The weather, however, still keeps cold at night, and this is affecting the tender plant, which in consequence does not put on much growth.

MR. JOE SHILLINGFORD, too, has been on the Rent Bill war-path, and at a monster meeting of teaplanters held on the 24th ultimo, at Dam-Dim, Silliguri, explained to the audience how injuriously the Bill would affect their interests. A memorial was duly signed for transmission to the Viceroy.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL WILKINSON inspects the Central Bengal Light Horse on the 20th and 21st March, after which sky races and a big pigsticking meet will be organised. With Messrs. Archie Hills, Morey, Stocks and a few other well-known spears good sport is a foregone conclusion.

Now that the Mozufferpore Club has a resident Secretary, it should, with able and energetic management, become one of the wealthiest in India. It might begin by taking, for a model, that admirably managed institution, the Darjeeling Club, where comfort and convenience are studied from the reading to the bedrooms.

THE Behar Landholders' Association held a big meeting on the 25th ultimo at Bankipore. The meeting room was crowded to suffocation, and impassioned speeches were made by the Maharaja of Hutwa, the Honourable Harbans Siha, Moulvie Fazl Rahman, Baboos Gadadhai Prosad and Bishesh-war Sinha, and Munshi Janki Sahai.

MADRAS.

At a meeting held at Madras on Friday evening, the 6th inst., it was resolved to establish a hospital in the city for caste native females. Mrs. Grant Duff presided on the occasion, and made an eloquent appeal for support to the scheme.

EURASIAN LOYALTY.—We hear, that in view of the present political crisis, the council of the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association has approved and is about to despatch to his Excellency the Governor a resolution placing the services of the community at the disposal of Government.—Times.

THE Madras Government have decided to move to Ootacamund immediately after Easter. One company of the 10th Native Infantry is directed to proceed to Ootacamund so as to arrive on the 3rd April for escort duty.

THE AGRAM OUTRAGE.—The military authorities have applied to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to sanction a general court-martial being assembled at Bangalore to investigate an alleged charge of rape against two soldiers quartered at Agram. Two non-commissioned officers have already been reduced to the ranks by sentence of a garrison court-martial for minor breaches of military discipline arising out of the above case.—Bangalore Spectator, March 5.

THE MULLIAPOORUM DISTURBANCES.—Telegraphic communication was, we are informed, received last evening, intimating that all previous orders passed in connection with two companies of the 1st Oxfordshire Light Infantry had been cancelled. The military authorities apprehend fresh disturbances, in consequence of which the companies will continue to remain longer at Mullia-poorum than was anticipated.—Id.

BALL AMMUNITION FORWARDED TO PESHAWAR.—On Monday last the Inspector-General of Ordnance and Magazines was about to ship one hundred and fourteen barrels containing ball ammunition to the address of the Chief Commissioner of Peshawar via Calcutta, but as the vessel sailed before the Ordnance Department were ready, the ammunition will be despatched by the first available opportunity. With this consignment the quantity shipped to the front within the last fortnight will be one million rounds of ball ammunition.—Times.

BOMBAY.

At a meeting of merchants held at Ahmedabad on March 8, it was resolved to memorialise Government against the license tax.

THE Nawab of Bhownuggar has established an orphanage at his capital for the children of those who perished during the famine.

THE investiture of the Rao of Cutch with the hereditary distinction of Sawai Bahadur has been made the occasion of popular festivities.

On the 4th the foundation-stone of an orphanage, which is to be erected at the expense of the Bhownuggar State, was laid at Bhownuggar by Colonel West, the Political Agent.

THE Chiefs of Kattiwar are taking steps to commemorate Sir James Fergusson's connection with this Presidency. Several of the Thakores have subscribed as much as Rs.5,000.

H.E. SIR JAMES FERGUSSON arrived in Bombay from Poona on the 6th inst. On Saturday his Excellency presided at the annual exhibition of the girls' schools of the Bombay Students' Literary and Scientific Society.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR was to preside at the annual distribution of prizes to the boys and girls of the Cathedral High Schools in the Town Hall, on Tuesday, the 17th inst., at 5 P.M.

THE Municipal Commissioner formally intimates that the first prize of Rs.5,000 for the designs for the new Municipal buildings has been awarded to Mr. R. F. Chisholm, and the second prize of Rs.3,000 to Lieut.-Colonel S. S. Morant, R.E. The third prize has not been awarded, as there was no design of sufficient merit to secure it.

At a meeting held at Kolhapore on Wednesday, the 11th inst., under the presidency of Aba Saheb, the Regent, it was resolved to raise a fund to provide a memorial to H.E. Sir James Fergusson on his retirement from office.

LORD RANDOLPH CHURCHILL arrived in Bombay on the 8th inst. from Baroda, and left the same evening for Hyderabad in company with Nawab Salar Jung, who arrived from Calcutta on Saturday, the 7th. His lordship leaves for England by the next mail.

A GOVERNMENT notification intimates that from the 1st April next the trial before any court of sessions in the Tanna district of all offences punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for ten years, shall be by jury.

THE Civil and Military Gazette says:—"Captain Humfrey's letters to the Times of India on horse-breeding in India contain a comparison between the relative costs of walers, Arabs, and country-breds as purchased by the Indian Government for remount purposes. The figures speak for themselves, and strongly support the writer's contention that the horse of the country, when properly bred, is the horse for the country, and for all kinds of military service therein.

CONSEQUENT on the death of Lieutenant-Colonel W. F. F. Waller, V.C., Major W. A. Salmon has been appointed Joint Administrator of Sangli, Major E. V. Siace, Joint Administrator of Rajpeephla, Lieut.-Colonel H. L. Nutt, Second Assistant to the Political Agent in Kattywar, Major G. E. Hancock, Third Assistant to the Political Agent in Kattywar, and Major J. M. Hunter, Assistant to the Political Agent, Mahi Kantha. The last two officers are to continue on the special duty upon which they are engaged.

BURMA.

CAPTAIN PARROTT, who arrived at Rangoon on the 23rd ult., took over charge on the 4th inst. from Captain Raikes, Deputy Commissioner of Hanthawaddy.

At a meeting of the Rangoon Municipal Committee on the 26th ult., the sum of £500 was asked for by the sub-committee to enable Mr. Clarke to bring out plans, estimates, and models of a draining scheme for Rangoon on the Schone's Pneumatic system.

NINGYAN, about sixty miles north of Tounghoo, the headquarters of the Upper Burma timber trade, has been burned down. Three hundred houses and a large amount of property were destroyed.

WE learn that Mr. J. Daniel, the head clerk of the Post Office at Akyab, is missing. It is suspected that all is not right in the Money Order Department of the office.—Rangoon Gazette.

WE understand that Captain Jennings has withdrawn his resignation as an officer of the Rangoon Volunteer Rifle Corps, and that he has been recommended for promotion to the rank of major.—Ibid.

MR. JOHN ILIFFE has started a 'bus which makes three journeys a week from Maulmain to Moodone, going out one day and coming back the next. Passengers are carried at the rate of an anna and a-half per mile, or Rs. 1 8-0, for the whole distance.

DISORDER AT RANGOON.—Another dacoity has been committed near Rangoon by an armed gang of eight men. Placards are posted about Rangoon containing incendiary threats, and fires are occurring almost nightly.

A WELL-KNOWN Mogul merchant at Rangoon has failed. His liabilities amount to about Rs.35,000, but endeavours are being made to effect an amicable composition with his creditors.

THE Moulemein Municipal Committee announce that from the 1st of April they intend to levy a wheel-tax of one rupee per wheel on all carriages and carts kept within Municipal limits. The revenue derived from this source is to be devoted to defraying the expense of watering the roads during the dry weather.

COLONEL OLCOTT delivered a lecture on "Theosophy" at the Ripon Hall, Rangoon, on Feb. 26. The aims of Theosophy, he said, was not to rival any existing creed or sect. Its first object, or the first idea with which it was started, was the getting men to unite for the advancement of mankind; to recognise human brotherhood without bringing in any element of discord. It sympathises with everything which widens the sense of human brotherhood, but it leaves every one free to follow his own creed. The first thing which a Theosophist bids himself to do is to extend to every one, whatever his race, colour or creed, the same toleration and courtesy which he expects to have shown to himself.

PEACE OR WAR?

IF any reliance could be placed either on Russian professions or on Mr. Gladstone's stability of purpose, every patriotic Englishman would earnestly hope that the issue of the present crisis might, after all, and in spite of probabilities, be a peaceful one. British interests are always in the direction of peace, provided always it be a "peace with honour," and not merely a temporary shuffle involving greater difficulties in the future. For the first time in its history—thanks probably to the happy inspiration of Lord Dufferin—the Gladstone Ministry is showing itself a true friend to peace; for it appears at last to have learnt the value of the old maxim, Si vis pacem, para bellum. In the wise preparations that are being everywhere made for that contest with Russia which has long been seen to be inevitable, we doubt not we see the handiwork of Lord Dufferin; and all parties, Liberals as well as Conservatives, are just now exclaiming, "Thank heaven, we have got rid of Lord Ripon in time." But the danger still remains that Lord Dufferin's statesmanship may be overruled, and his policy reversed, by the next swing of the pendulum of Gladstonian vacillation. The hot fit is on the Government now, but who can say how long it will last? We hear not only of vast military preparations in this country and in India, and of an ultimatum having been most properly sent to St. Petersburg; but, further, it now transpires that Mr. Gladstone, always running into extremes, has also sent an ultimatum to the Sultan, and insisted on obtaining an unwilling adhesion of Turkey to the mischievous and shortsighted Financial Convention. Now, this sort of thing never lasts long. Mr. Gladstone, when he has marched up a hill, always promptly marches down again. So that, until Russia has actually submitted to our just demands, or until war has been actually declared, there will always be danger of another surrender, unless the British public can be made to comprehend the tremendous nature of the issues involved, and can be induced to declare in unmistakeable terms that such suicidal folly will not be permitted.

The question is a perfectly simple one. First, as to the merits of the dispute, over which the Russians and their advocates in this country are endeavouring to raise such a dust as may serve to obscure the facts of their audacious aggression on the territories of our ally the Ameer. The pretence that the Afghan occupation of Penjdeh constituted an advance into the "debated or debateable" country transcends the sublimest heights to which Russian effrontery has hitherto attained; and the pompous challenge of the Pall Mall Gazette is either puerile or something worse. For the basis of the agreement between the English and Russian Governments for the amicable delimitation of the Russo-Afghan frontier was distinctly stated to be, that the frontier line should be traced from Sarakhs to Khoja Saleh—a line running far north of Penjdeh and of all the strategical positions now claimed by the Russians. Any movement of Afghan troops that did not approach this imaginary line was obviously quite as legitimate as any movement of Russian troops to the north of that line—say, between Sarakhs and Merv. Penjdeh, as even its name indicates, has always been Afghan if it has been anything. It has paid revenue to the rulers of Afghanistan whenever they have been strong enough to exact obedience in any part of this region. Neither Mme. Novikoff nor the Pall Mall Gazette itself would pretend that twelve months ago even the wildest Russian dreamer had ever thought of the country between Penjdeh and Sarakhs as belonging to Russia, seeing that no Cossack uniform had ever appeared in that territory, and the presence of Russian troops in Sarakhs itself was very generally regarded as an aggression on Afghan rights. We have seen of late that Lord Granville's diplomacy can do many foolish things; but it is inconceivable that even Lord Granville could have been so grossly unjust or so wantonly careless as to include Penjdeh within the scope of Sir Peter Lumsden's powers—and that he did not do so is, we have no doubt, indicated in his lordship's reply to the Duke of Argyll on Friday last. Even if Lord Granville had so absurdly blundered, it may be questioned whether the Amir of Afghanistan could possibly be held bound by such an act of stupid negligence on the part of our Minister—negligence which would have to be promptly repaired, as a matter of course, as soon as the Commission got to work. If M. De Giers had, by a slip of the pen in his instructions to General Zelenoi, mentioned Merv as debateable, it will hardly be contended that we should have been justified in demanding pendente lite, the withdrawal of the Russian troops from that place.

The affectation of the Pall Mall Gazette and its Russian clients, in pretending that the dispute is merely one for the possession of a worthless strip of sandy desert, is too obvious to need refutation. In the first place, if this were true, why do the Russians talk of going to war about it? In the second place, we all know that the possession of this so-called worthless strip really means the absolute command of the great strategical position of Herat, and of the very gates of India. And, what is even more important, in the third place, it is perfectly certain that any flinching on our part before the menaces of Russia will be regarded, and justly regarded, by the Afghans as a shameful and cowardly betrayal of their rights and interests. They will feel that we have sold them to the Russians. They will remember our Russianising timidity in 1873, and the consequent fate of Shere Ali; and the merest instincts of self-preservation will warn them no longer to rest on a broken reed. They will naturally and wisely throw themselves into the arms of the Power that has proved itself at once the stronger and the more constant. And the only possible result will be that we shall have to face an alliance of that martial race with those powerful aggressors, from whom we are too cowardly to defend them; and the Ghazis of Afghanistan will become the formidable vanguard of the Russian invasion of India.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ORDERS.

GRANT, Mr. H. E., assistant engineer, 2nd grade, is appointed to act as officiating executive engineer, Indore Division, during the absence of Mr. A. Stoddard, executive engineer, Indore Division, on privilege leave, from Jan. 21.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

—o—

We learn by telegraph that Colonel A. M. Rawlins, Remount Agent, Hosur, Madras Presidency, is to succeed Major St. Quintin as Remount Agent, Calcutta.—Times of India.

With the sanction of Government, the Commander-in-Chief in India is pleased to grant furlough to the Bengal Native Army, to the extent where practicable of 15 per cent. of the effective strength of corps, under the conditions laid down in section 13, paras. 217 and 219, Bengal Army Regulations. Furlough will commence from the 15th march, and terminate, save in exceptional cases, on the 15th October, 1885.

The inspection of the Cachar and Sylhet Mounted Rifles took place at Silchar on the 28th ult. Nearly sixty troopers answered the roll call. Colonel Robertson, commanding the 4th Native Infantry, was the inspecting officer. He expressed himself very well pleased with the satisfactory way in which the Volunteers had gone through their manoeuvres, and intimated to Captain Milne, who was in command, that he would have pleasure in sending a favourable report to the General.

The Pioneer says :—The Pioneer Regiment remain at Quetta, and the Oxford Light Infantry, now quartered in the Madras Presidency, is under orders to proceed there at once. This strengthening of the Quetta garrison is a step in the right direction in view of the threatening aspect of affairs in the North, but we should be glad to see a complete brigade sent there with a battery and a regiment of cavalry, fully equipped for field service, and this will certainly be done in certain by no means impossible contingencies.

Amongst the recipients of prizes at the prize distribution in connection with the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles on Saturday, the 7th inst., were two old members of the Bombay Corps—Captain Adam Smith and Volunteer W. F. Whitehead. The former carried off the Maharajah of Bettiah's prize, valued at Rs.200, and a prize offered by the regiment, and the latter secured two regimental first prizes, valued at Rs.75 and Rs.50 respectively.

The Commander-in-Chief, accompanied by Brigadier-General Gillespie, Quartermaster-General, and Colonel Rivett-Carnac, Military Secretary, arrived at Kurrachee from Bombay on Thursday, the 5th inst. On Friday morning, at seven o'clock, his Excellency was present at a parade of all the troops in garrison. On Saturday afternoon General Hardinge intended visiting Manora, to inspect the harbour defences, and on Sunday his Excellency and Staff, accompanied by Brigadier-General Luck, Commanding in Sind, and Captain Lyster, were to leave Kurrachee for Hyderabad and Jacobabad.

Under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, it is notified in general orders that Her Majesty has been graciously pleased, by Royal Proclamation, to direct that soldiers serving in the Royal Fusiliers, Royal Irish Regiment, Cheshire Regiment, East Surrey Regiment, Hampshire Regiment, Dorsetshire Regiment, South Lancashire Regiment, Oxfordshire Light Infantry, South Yorkshire Regiment, King's Royal Rifle Corps, Durham Light Infantry, Rifle Brigade, Royal Artillery, and Royal Engineers, who on or after the 18th February, 1885, would, in pursuance of the terms of their enlistment, be transferred to the Army Reserve, shall continue in army service until legally discharged or transferred to the Army Reserve. All transfers to the Army Reserve from the above-named corps are accordingly suspended until further orders.

Says the Indian Daily News:—India is not at war, she can record no splendid victory, and yet on Saturday morning, the Gazette of India saw no less than forty lieutenant-colonels promoted to the rank of colonel in the army. Of these, one belonged to Madras, one to Bombay, and thirty-eight to Bengal. This represents a double evil. First, a very serious addition to the army charges, and second, the near approach to the time when a number of capable and experienced officers will find themselves in possession of rank which will effectually forbid their employment. Sir Henry Norman might be a very able official, but with this Gazette of forty newly-made colonels before us, it is very difficult to understand in what way his most preposterous unbusiness-like, and unsoldierly staff corps scheme has benefited either the army or the Empire.

PRODUCE MARKETS.

INDIAN TEA.—Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson report as follows on the Tea Market, from March 12th to the 26th:—Since the 12th instant 40,000 packages have been catalogued for sale, including 700 of Ceylon and 2,000 of reprinted teas. The subsidence of the excitement in the country, and the extra supplies brought to market in consequence of the improvement in prices, have checked the activity of buyers, and the sales have passed quietly, but without any flatness of tone. Demand has continued strong for all the better qualities, especially for fine Pekoes and Broken Pekoes, at firm or rather dearer prices; but the inferior grades between 8d. and 1s. 2d., upon which the improvement was most marked, prices have receded, and fully ½d. of the recovery has been lost. During the first twenty days of this month duty was paid in London upon 17,500,000lbs., as compared with 8,500,000lbs. in 1884, and some of the dealers think the increased rate will be maintained up to the date of the budget. This of course entails a financial strain of which the effect will be felt for many weeks to come, and which must contract the volume of business until the surplus duty-paid stocks are worked off.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, March 20th; Madras and Allahabad, March 18th; Calcutta, March 17th.

THE past week has witnessed the most important political event of recent times in India. The Viceroy of India and the Ameer of Afghanistan have met in friendly conference on Indian soil, under circumstances which render the meeting one of the highest political significance. The never-ceasing advance of Russia towards India has at last brought that aggressive Power into direct contact with Afghanistan. The oft-repeated warnings of Sir Henry Rawlinson and every other Indian authority, always disregarded and usually derided by doctrinaire Liberal statesmen, have at length been justified by events; and by the irony—perhaps we might say by the justice—of fate, it has now fallen to the lot of a Liberal Government to be confronted by the actual presence of a danger which has always been represented by them hitherto as a mere chimera of Tory imagination. When the Ameer's predecessor, the ill-fated Sher Ali, in 1873 urgently implored Mr. Gladstone's Government to provide beforehand for the possibility of this danger, he was sneeringly told by Lord Northbrook that "Her Majesty's Government did not share his apprehension of Russian aggression." Thereupon, of course, Sher Ali threw himself into the arms of Russia; we irretrievably lost the opportunity of securing the friendly aid of his formidable power as a buffer between ourselves and the Russians, and the hostility to ourselves caused by this folly was changed into neutrality only after a long and costly war—while Afghan friendship was only to be repurchased by a forcible change of dynasty, and is due rather to fear of renewed Russian aggression than to any love for ourselves.

UNDESERVED good fortune has, however, attended us in one most important point. It has luckily happened that the destinies of the Empire have, at the most critical moment in its history, been confided to the direction of a statesman who has the unique advantage of being a Liberal in name and a patriot in policy. As a Liberal Viceroy, Lord Dufferin is in a position to enforce support from the Home Government, while he is comparatively free from the embarrassment of factious attacks from the Radical party. And the consequence is, that he has met the Ameer with full powers to accord to him that honourable treatment which Lord Northbrook was not permitted to offer in 1873.

As far as we can at present judge, the arrangements for the conference at Rawul Pindi, its circumstances, and the manner in which it has been conducted by Lord Dufferin, leave nothing to be desired. The presence of the chief Feudatories of the Empire or their representatives, and of the great officers of the State, has presented to the world in general, and to the Ameer in particular, the magnificent spectacle of the assembled might of Imperial India, and worthily illustrated the genius and the sagacious statesmanship of Lord Beaconsfield. The pageant at Rawul Pindi has been at once a fitting sequel to, and a splendid justification of, the not dissimilar scenes of the Imperial Durbar at Delhi in 1877.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Lalmohun Ghose, who aspires to be considered a representative of India in England, should have chosen this particular moment for publicly indulging in some remarks characterised by singular inaccuracy and bad taste on the ceremonies which attended the Proclamation of Her Gracious Majesty as Empress of India. Mr. Ghose, addressing a meeting of Radicals at Manchester, last Wednesday, spoke of those ceremonies as "the idle display of pomp and pageantry in presence of famine which was witnessed during the Viceroyalty of Lord Lytton, and which, followed by the terrible events on the North-Western frontier, entailed cruelly-increased taxation." Mr. Ghose misrepresents his countrymen when he calls the Proclamation ceremonies an "idle display," for Indians are too loyal to regard them in that light. He knows, or ought to know, that the "presence of famine" was not anticipated for a moment until the arrangements for the ceremony had been virtually completed beyond recall; and that, so far from increasing the burden of the famine, they afforded an opportunity for valuable personal conferences in regard to measures of relief. And he states that which is absolutely incorrect and misleading when he says that the Proclamation "entailed cruelly-increased taxation."

It is pleasant to turn from such sentiments as these to the conspicuous loyalty of the Chiefs and Princes of India. The long list that is given in the Times of those who have spontaneously placed at the disposal of Her Majesty all the resources, military and other, of their States for the defence of India against the common foe, testifies in the strongest and most substantial way to the reality of Indian loyalty. Among the great nobles of British India the Maharajah of Darbhanga stands honourably foremost in this glorious competition of loyalty and patriotism; and affords a splendid example of that true Indian spirit that places Rajbhakti, or loving personal loyalty to the Sovereign, as the highest of all virtues—and of that right feeling that subordinates all class grievances or private differences of opinion to the welfare of the State.

AMONG the great feudatories of the Empire, all have been alike earnest in volunteering aid, whether Hindus, or Muhammadans, or Sikhs; and among the Hindus, Mahrattas have vied with Rajputs in these tangible proofs of their loyalty. Even from the remote fastnesses of Nepal have come these messages of friendship and affection. Never has any more agreeable or more congenial duty devolved on any Prince of our Royal and Imperial House than that which will be gladly performed by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, when he brings these messages home to his Royal mother; and both Lord Dufferin and the Duke of Connaught are to be congratulated on the admirable part appropriately taken by His Royal Highness in this great historical event, and the happy effect it has rightly and honourably produced on the mind of the Amir.

THE account of the Amir given by the Times correspondent is an eminently satisfactory one. It is to be hoped that the intention of visiting Europe, with which he is credited, may be carried out. That he would meet with a hearty welcome in England is certain; and it is impossible to doubt that the results of such a tour would prove most advantageous to the country and people of Afghanistan.

WE take the following items of Personal Intelligence of our Indian visitors from the Journal of the National Indian Association :—

In the Netley Examination held in February for the Indian Medical Service, Mr. U. N. Mukerji stood fourth in order of merit, gaining as total (London and Netley) marks 4,961. He will now receive a commission as surgeon in H.M.'s Indian Medical Service.

At the Drawing Room held at Buckingham Palace on March 18th, Mrs. Cowasjee Jehanghier Readymoney had the honour of being presented to Her Majesty the Queen by the Countess of Kimberley.

The following Indian gentlemen attended the Levée held by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales on March 14th: Mr. Mohammed Ali Rogay, Mr. Syed M. Nabi Ullah, B.A., Mr. Mahomed Abdul Jalil.

Arrival.—Mr. F. K. Mandvala, from Bombay, for medical study.

Departure.—Mr. J. E. Modi, Barrister-at-Law, for Bombay.

Mr. G. A. D. Haviland, first grade officer, Indian Marine Lieutenant J. B. W. Atkin, 7th Bengal Cavalry.

Telegraphic Intelligence.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent at Calcutta, dated April 5:—

"A telegram received here on Thursday last stated that Russia had accepted in principle a proposal of Lord Granville that the Afghan frontier should not be drawn further south than Karez Elias, or Chaman-i-Baid, or further north than Shir Tepe or Sari Yazi.

"This news has been much discussed, and the general opinion is that it is very disheartening, as indicating a disposition on the part of the Ministry to give up much more than Russia can fairly claim. If the southern line be adopted Russia will obtain the important starting points of Penjeh, Maruchak, Akrobat, Pul-i-Khatun, and Zulfiakar, as well as the practical admission that her recent advances were justifiable. It is generally felt throughout India that war is preferable to such concessions, and that to yield any material point now will only postpone the crisis for a few years, to a time when Russia will be fully prepared, while England will have lapsed into a chronic state of unreadiness.

"Meanwhile, the centre of interest, so far as India is concerned, has shifted from Calcutta to Rawul Pindi; and the public is anxiously looking for some indication of the result of the conferences there. Nothing as yet has been allowed to transpire. Whatever else be done, it is earnestly to be hoped that some arrangement be made regarding the fortification of Herat, and its occupation, if not by British troops, at any rate by a garrison whose fidelity can be trusted.

"Hardly a day passes without giving fresh proof how entirely the natives are identifying themselves with the British cause. Among other examples may be mentioned that of the Maharajah of Mysore, who has equipped a regiment of cavalry, which he has offered for service in Afghanistan. He is also providing a large number of bullocks, and has put the whole resources of his State at the disposal of the Government. The Nepaulese Durdar has made a most cordial offer of assistance, which has been telegraphed to the Queen, who replied expressing her thanks. Other Princes in all parts of the country have displayed equal anxiety to proffer help. The general body of the people show no less loyalty, often going beyond mere words, and proposing to present large sums of money to the Government.

"Mr. Grant Duff, presiding at a meeting in Doveton College, on Wednesday last, expressed his views on the situation. He said that he had fully hoped, and now believed, that we should not have war on this occasion. There might be wars in the future, as there had been in the past; but when war was so near as it had seemed to be recently it was delightful to see England spring to arms with the same alacrity as in the time of the Spanish Armada. There were never more persons averse to war than now, and never had those persons so strong an influence on the Government; but at no time had we been so well prepared at all points."

"The public attention being almost exclusively fixed on the Rawul Pindi Durbar and the Russo-Afghan difficulty, domestic events have excited little interest during the last few weeks. Rumours have been current in the Punjab that some small frontier troubles may be expected, in the shape of a tribal raid on the Agror Valley, in the British district of Hazara. The garrison of the outpost at Oghi has been reinforced—a step which will probably suffice to keep the tribes quiet. It is stated that after the breaking up of the Rawul Pindi camp a large force may be sent to spend the summer in Hazara, where its presence will have a salutary effect on the frontier tribes, while it will be well placed for a march across the border, if necessary.

"News has come from the north-eastern frontier that the recent demonstration, consisting of the march of an armed police force along the Lushai and Naga borders, has had a most excellent effect. The chiefs received the police well, professed great friendliness, and expressed their readiness to abstain from raids and to make arrangements for trade.

"The Director of Agriculture in the North West Provinces has issued a favourable forecast of wheat prospects. He has estimated the full harvest of those provinces at 2,480,000 tons, and expects that this year's wheat crop will amount to 1,950,000 tons, distributed as follows:—White, 448,000 tons; red, 740,000 tons; and mixed white and red, 762,000 tons.

"The Bengal Local Self-Government Bill passed yesterday, just two years after its introduction. The local Legislature then closed its session. The Lieutenant-Governor and the Secretaries will go to Darjeeling on Tuesday.

"It is stated that the construction of the new Calcutta docks will be suspended, pending further inquiry.

"The trade and navigation reports for the eleven months ending February 28 show the following results:—The total imports, including treasure, were of the value of Rs.63,71,49,180, against Rs.61,42,66,102 in the corresponding period of the previous year; while the exports were of the value of Rs.76,19,67,180, against Rs.80,38,91,626.

The following telegrams are from the Times correspondent at Rawul Pindi, dated April 5:—

"It rained pitilessly yesterday. The Viceroy held a Durbar of the Punjab Durbaries, to enable them to return to their homes, as it is uncertain, on account of the weather, when the Durbar in honour of the Ameer can take place.

"This afternoon the Viceroy inspected the Ameer's troops—"hard" men and hard horses. It was found impossible to hold a grand review on the Khunna plain, but the troops will march past to-morrow on the grand trunk road.

"The Viceroy and the Ameer meet daily, but the greatest secrecy is preserved with regard to the subjects discussed."

"The following troops, composing the Second Army Corps and Reserve Division, have been warned for service.

"Second Army Corps:—

"British Cavalry.—The Carbineers and the 17th Lancers.

"Native Cavalry.—The 3rd and 18th Bengal Cavalry, the 19th Bengal Lancers, the Guides Cavalry, the 3rd Cavalry of the Hyderabad Contingent, and the 1st Bombay Lancers.

"British Infantry.—The 2nd Battalion of the Northumberland Fusiliers, the 1st of the Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, the 2nd of the Gloucestershire Regiment, the 2nd of the Cheshire Regiment, the 1st of the Border Regiment, the 2nd of the Highland Light Infantry, the 2nd of the Seaforth Highlanders (Ross-shire Buffs, the Duke of Albany's), the 2nd of the Royal Fusiliers (City of London Regiment), the 1st of the Dorsetshire Regiment, the 1st of the Durham Light Infantry, and the 1st of the West Riding (Duke of Wellington's) Regiment.

"Native.—The 1st Bengal, the 2nd Bengal, the 21st, 25th, and 26th Punjab, the 1st and 3rd Ghoorkas, the Guides Infantry, the 1st Madras, and the 29th Bombay.

"The following native infantry regiments have been transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Army Corps:—The 4th Sikhs, the 20th, 19th, and 6th Punjab. Their places in the 1st Army Corps will be taken by the 23rd and 24th Madras, and the 9th and 23rd Bombay.

"Three companies of the Bengal and three companies of the Bombay sappers.

"Artillery.—Two batteries of Horse, six of Field, one of Mountain, and two of Garrison Artillery.

"Reserve Division.

"British Cavalry.—The 1st (the King's) Dragoon Guards.

"Native Cavalry.—The 1st Bengal, the 5th Punjab, and the 2nd Bombay.

"British Infantry.—The 2nd Battalion of the Prince of Wales's (North Staffordshire) Regiment, the 2nd Royal Munster Fusiliers, the 2nd of the Leicestershire Regiment, the 2nd of the Norfolk Regiment, the 2nd of the Duke of Cambridge's Own (Middlesex) Regiment, and the 1st of the Worcestershire Regiment.

"Native Infantry.—The 3rd and 12th Bengal, the 27th and 30th Bombay, and the 27th Madras.

"Three companies of Sappers, one from each Presidency."

APRIL 6.

"To-day there was a review of the troops assembled here. The Imperial troops numbered about 8,000, and the contingent of Chiefs about 3,000.

"The review, which took place on the cavalry parade ground, consisted simply of a march past, there being no space for troops to be drawn up in a line.

"The Viceroy and Ameer rode on to the ground together, with their combined Staffs. The Duke of Connaught rode on the Viceroy's left hand, and the Commanders-in-Chief of Bombay and Madras, with their Staffs, were in the cortège. The Viceroy was in civil dress, the Ameer wore a white uniform of Russian pattern.

"When the Viceroy and Ameer had taken their place at the saluting-point, the troops, led by the Commander-in-Chief of India, entered the ground from the road, and marched past. The army presented a splendid appearance. The British infantry regiments, however, were below their strength. The Highland regiments attracted most attention. The Native infantry went by very steadily. The British cavalry consisted of the 9th Lancers, the 1st (the King's) Dragoon Guards, and the Carbineers. Among the artillery was an elephant battery. The volunteers numbered 400, including the cadets from Lahore.

"The native contingents followed the Imperial troops. Their appearance was a surprise to the spectators. Man for man, they looked as good as the native Imperial soldiers, and they require only a few months' training under British officers to equal them in drill. They wore a clean, smart uniform. Their cavalry and artillery horses were good. Finally, they marched past in creditable style.

"It rained at intervals. Although the review was shorn of much of its effects as a military spectacle, the sight was a picturesque one. The scarlet of the Sappers, who kept the front, stood out clear against the white-clad crowd beyond. To the right the infantry could be seen, across the valley, winding their way towards their camps, and gradually disappearing behind a knoll crowned with trees; while the foreground was occupied in turn by the other branches of the Queen's service, and the troops of the Chiefs. The effect was considerably heightened by the passage of a train which ran shrieking over a corner of the ground."

"The Quetta railway cannot be completed for two years to come. Orders have, however, been issued to construct a temporary railway through the Bolan. Starting from Pir Choki, it will follow the bed of the river, and then run along the old road to Sir-i-Bolan, and be continued from Darwaza into Quetta.

"The gradients between Sir-i-Bolan and Darwaza are too steep for the laying of a railway. The instructions are to leave the new military road free for traffic; but that road is useless for the purpose of making a railway, owing to the want of a bridge.

"The arrangements are completed for the transport of two battalions a day by the State railway to Rindli, the point where the Quetta railway was stopped."

Home News.

COUNCIL DRAFTS FOR INDIA.—The tenders for Rs.50,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday last at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—in bills, on Calcutta, Rs.1,60,000, average rate 1s. 6.8125d.; and Bombay, Rs.8,25,000, average rate 1s. 6.81d. In telegraphic transfers, on Calcutta, Rs.7,00,000, average rate 1s. 6.879d.; Bombay, Rs.11,00,000, average rate 1s. 6.88d.; and Madras, Rs.1,00,000, average rate 1s. 6.9d., a total of Rs.28,85,000. Tenders for bills on Calcutta and Bombay at 1s. 6.13-16d. and above, and for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at 1s. 6.7d. and above, will receive in full. A statement has been posted up at the chief cashier's office at the Bank of England, showing that during the financial year ended with March 31st, the India Council has sold bills and telegraphic transfers to the extent of Rs.17,03,72,118, realising in sterling £13,705,777, at an average rate of 1s. 7.307d. per rupee. The sterling amounts received in 1884-5 on account of Rs.17,10,22,118 in bills and telegraphic transfers, including the value of Rs.6,50,000 of transfers sold in 1883-4, but not paid for within that financial year, were £13,758,909.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The shipments of bullion for India, from March 25th to the 1st inst. inclusive, were as follows:—Per Peshawur, March 25, Bombay, £133,000, Calcutta, £10,000; per Brindisi, April 1, Bombay, £176,000.—From J. Westwood Thompson's Indian Circular.

PRESENTATION CASKET TO MRS. CARMICHAEL.—We have the pleasure to state that the beautiful silver casket presented to Mrs. Carmichael by a large number of native ladies of Madras, which lately arrived in England, has been inspected by the Queen, having been sent to Windsor Castle for that purpose, by desire of Her Majesty. The address which accompanied the casket was read with satisfaction by Her Majesty, who has expressed, through General Sir Henry Ponsonby, to Mrs. Carmichael her admiration of the artistic workmanship of the casket, and her interest in the occasion of its presentation.—Journal National Indian Association.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAYS IN INDIA.—The following letter has been received by Mr. C. M. Norwood, M.P., president of the Association of the Chambers of Commerce, from the Under-Secretary of State for India:—"India-office, S.W., 31st March, 1885. Sir,—I am directed by the Secretary of State for India in Council to acknowledge the receipt of the memorial from the Association of the Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom expressing the hope that Her Majesty's Government will carry out the recommendations of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Indian railways, and that it will also offer such terms of guarantee as will induce the public to assist more largely in making new railways. In reply I am desired to acquaint the association that the Secretary of State has been in communication with the Government of India as to the steps to be taken to give effect, as far as practicable, to the recommendations of the Select Committee of last session, and that it has been decided to increase for the present the annual borrowings by the Government of India for public works from 250 lakhs to 350 lakhs, the greater part of which it is proposed to expend annually on railway extension. This increased borrowing on the part of the Government of India takes effect during the official year 1885-86. The Secretary of State is fully sensible of the importance of inducing the public to invest more largely in new railway undertakings in India, provided the money can be raised on terms which are not too onerous to Indian revenues. Terms have recently been agreed upon with the promoters of company for a line from Bhopal to Gwalior and Cawnpore, with branches to Manikpur, on the East Indian Railway, and to Saugor, and negotiations have also been commenced for the formation of a company to construct and work a line of railway between Nagpur and Calcutta. The present condition of the money market, however, prevents the completion of either of these arrangements. It may be of interest to the association to know that during 1883-84 539½ miles of new railway were completed and opened for traffic, and that at the close of that year (31st March, 1884) the total length of lines sanctioned was 14,290 miles, of which 10,832½ were open for traffic, and 3,357½ remained to be completed.—I am, &c., J. K. Cross."

STOPPAGE OF FURLOUGH.—The following is a list of the officers of the Indian Army who were ordered to embark at Brindisi on the 6th inst. en route to rejoin their regiments:—Col. H. B. Haane, Lieut.-Col. G. C. Jackson, Capt. V. C. Tonnochy, Col. A. Battye, C.B.; Lieut.-Col. J. H. Broome, Col. A. W. Montague, Lieut.-Col. F. W. Collis, Surg.-Major A. M. Paterson, Capt. G. Davidson, Major G. H. C. Dyce, Capt. J. C. Campbell, Capt. T. S. Boileau, Capt. W. Lambert, Major W. B. Aislabie, Surg.-Major D. P. Macdonald, Capt. C. S. Wheler, Lieut. E. E. Robertson, Major E. A. Money, Lieut.-Col. H. W. J. Senior, Surg.-Major G. C. Chesnaye, Capt. J. L. O'Brien, Lieut. E. E. Taylor, Col. A. FitzHugh, Col. H. Rowland, Lieut. W. S. Marshall, Major W. F. Hume, Major C. J. Hughes, Capt. W. A. Wetherall, Col. F. T. Humfrey, Major R. L. Price, Major C. M. Erskine, Major F. H. Blanshard, Surg. J. Lewtas, Lieut.-Col. W. North, Col. C. M. Griffith, Capt. H. A. Vincent, Capt. D. D. Passy, Col. W. J. Bell, Col. F. G. Rideout, Lieut.-Col. J. Ward, Lieut.-Col. S. J. Browne, Lieut. J. G. Hunter, Capt. C. Hogge, Major G. W. Beresford, Lieut. E. P. Hutchinson, Lieut. R. H. Twigg, Major S. J. Lambert, Major E. C. S. Jackson, Lieut. F. S. St. Quentin, Major C. M. Hall, Lieut. E. H. Rodwell, Lieut. J. G. Ramsay, Capt. A. W. T. Radcliffe, Surg. W. Conry, Lieut.-Col. J. F. F. Colagan, Lieut. A. B. Pritchard, Major T. Shepherd, Major J. Hay, Lieut. J. Lamb, Lieutenant J. Eardley-Wilmot, Captain C. Hogg, Lieut.-Col. de L. R. F. Wooldridge, Lieut.-Col. W. F. Sandwith, Major J. G. Fagan, Capt. L. F. Heath, Capt. E. A. Barclay. With the exceptions of Cols. Bell, Rideout, and Ward, and Capt. Passy, the officers of the Madras army embark a week later. The following officers are under orders to embark for Bombay by the P. and O. Co.'s steamer leaving Brindisi on April 13:—Lieut.-Col. R. W. Hesketh, Col. H. C. Wright, Capt. J. R. Rawlinson, Capt. McCausland, Col. F. B. Boone, Capt. Leader, Capt. Whittemore, Major H. T. H. Baber, Lieut. H. E. Porter, Col. J. K. Clubley, Col. B. H. Preston, Col. R. Griffiths, Major R. J. McGhee, Col. H. A. Justice, Col. Woulfe Hay, Lieut. J. W. Parker, Surgeon-Major Sargent, Major J. J. Kennedy, Surgeon E. Ferrand, Col. J. M. Sexton, Lieut. Pritchard, Lieut. Meade, Col. Gordon, Col. Austin, Major McNeill, Col. Keays, Capt. Mayne, Major Fagan, Col. R. Morris, Capt. J. E. Barr, Col. Chambers, Col. Cotton, Lieut. E. C. Cox, Col. C. A. Cunningham, Lieut. J. W. Currie, Lieut. A. A. Lane, Capt. Monteith, Lieut. Montgomery, Lieut.-Col. Payne, Major Welchman, Major Wratislaw, Surgeon J. Lucas, and Col. Magrath.

NOTICES OF MEETINGS, DIVIDENDS, &c.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA.—The directors have declared a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum for the half-year ending December 31. £20,000 has been added to the reserve fund, and £8,300 carried forward.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA.—The report of the directors states that the net profit for the year ending December 31 last, including £1,974 brought forward, amounts to £70,447. An interim dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum has already been paid for the half-year ending June 30, and the sum of £25,000 carried to reserve fund; and it is now proposed to pay a similar dividend for the half-year ending December 31; to place a further sum of £10,000 to the credit of the reserve fund, making a total addition to this fund for the year of £35,000; and to carry forward a balance of £12,184 to next account.

CREDIT FONCIER OF MAURITIUS.—The twenty-first ordinary general meeting was held on March 31 at the City Terminus Hotel. Mr. W. Stanley presided, and in moving the adoption of the report stated that there was a decrease of £12,320 in their debenture capital, but during the early part of the year, and pending applications for new loans, the Board had not been at all anxious to issue further debentures. The net profit for the year had been £18,333, and the available balance was £18,395. They now proposed to pay a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, making the distribution for the year, with the interim dividend, 10 per cent. The island had been passing through a severe financial crisis, but the company had not been injuriously affected. In recognition of the services which Mr. Dick, their secretary, had rendered to the company, they had appointed him manager and secretary. Mr. Longridge seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

OBITUARY.

✕ DR. GEORGE PEARSE, late of the Madras Medical Service, and an honorary physician to the Queen, died at Cheltenham on the 28th ult. at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. The deceased gentleman was nominated an assistant-surgeon on the Madras Medical Establishment in 1824, and in 1837, on being promoted to the rank of surgeon, he was appointed secretary to the Medical Board of that presidency, and occupied that position till 1848. In 1851 he was posted to the Mysore Division as superintending surgeon, and subsequently became head of the Medical Department of Madras as Principal Inspector-General of Hospitals, retiring from the service on April 20, 1861. In September of the same year he was gazetted an honorary physician to Her Majesty.

COLONEL NEVINSON WILLOUGHBY DE COURCY, C.B., late of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, died on the 30th ult. at Clapham. He was the second son of the late Captain Nevinson de Courcy, R.N., K.T.S., by marriage with Mary, daughter of Mr. William Blennerhassett, of Ballyseedy, county Kerry, and cousin of Lord Kingsale. He was born in 1823, entered the Royal Marines in 1841, and retired as colonel in 1877. The gallant officer served in Japan from 1864 to 1866, and also in the Ashantee war of 1873-4. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (Military Division) in 1877. Colonel de Courcy married in 1866 Maria Jane, daughter of the late Mr. William Cooke, of the Madras Civil Service, but was left a widower in 1881.

COLONEL ARTHUR LOWRY COLE, C.B., late of the 17th Regiment, died on Monday, the 30th ult., at Wimbledon, very suddenly. The deceased was the eldest son of the late General the Hon. Sir Galbraith Lowry Cole, G.C.B., sometime Colonel of the 27th Foot, and Governor successively of Gravesend and Tilbury, and the island of Mauritius, and of the Cape of Good Hope, and he was the grandson of the first Earl of Enniskillen; his mother was Lady Frances Harris, second daughter of James, first Earl of Malmesbury, and he was born in August, 1817. He served with the 17th Regiment in the Crimean Campaign, and commanded it at the siege of Sebastopol, and at the assault on the Redan on the 18th of June, 1855. For these services he was mentioned in despatches, received the medal with clasp, the Turkish medal, the 5th class of the Order of Medjidie, and was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (Military Division). Colonel Cole married in 1854 Elizabeth Frances, daughter of the late Rear-Admiral Villiers Francis Hatton, by whom he has left issue three sons and four daughters.

SIR VERE HENRY LEVINGE, died on March 22 at Madras. The deceased Baronet was the sixth son of Sir Richard Levinge, sixth baronet, by marriage with Elizabeth Anne, eldest daughter and co-heir of the first Lord Ranelagh, and was born in November, 1819. He succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his brother, Sir Richard G. A. Levinge, as recently as September 28 last year. The late Sir Vere was educated at Haileybury, and was for some years in the Madras Civil Service. He is succeeded, as ninth baronet, by his brother, Henry Corbyn Levinge, born in 1828, and married in 1857, to Ellen, daughter of Mr. R. Barnes of Purneah.

ENGLISH SILVER COINS.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—As ten English florins are intrinsically worth only a little more than three-fourths of a gold sovereign common sense says that it ought to be easy to obtain ten worn florins for one new sovereign.

And yet it is often difficult to obtain change, even from banks. What is the cause? Is it the purpose of the English Government to oblige us to accept Mr. Childers's nine-shilling half-sovereigns, or does any one wish to entice the English labouring class into public-houses, where silver change is readily given to those who drink beer?

The English Government could in one month make £100,000 profit by coining florins; and a much larger profit if it were to proclaim that English florins should be current in India as rupees. After such a proclamation the English Mint would be unable to coin florins fast enough.—Your obedient servant.

THE Rangpore Dikprokeah (Kakina Rangpore) says:—"Fear of the Russians has become unavoidable. If what is written by the Paris correspondent of the Times be true, then the English people ought not to be indifferent now. The desire for the conquest of India has become stronger in the minds of the Russians. The British Government ought carefully to adopt precautionary measures."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Englishman thus speaks of the constitution of the Select Committee on the Patwari Bill:—"A Bill has lately been introduced by Mr. A. P. MacDonnell in the Bengal Council called the Canungo and Patwari Bill. I do not wish now to enter into the merits of this Bill; doubtless we shall soon hear much on this subject. Suffice it to say here that, for very good reasons, it is most objectionable to the zemindars in Bengal and Behar. In the earlier stage of this Bill, on the 14th instant, its reading in the Bengal Council was opposed, and the motion being put, its reading was carried by seven votes to four, thus showing the strength of the two parties who were to consider it. After this the Bill, which, be it observed, is essentially a Government Bill following in the steps of the Rent Bill, was referred to a Select Committee of six, and of these six four were taken from the Government majority and two only from the zemindary minority. In a Select Committee so formed what hope can the zemindars have of an impartial hearing?" Comments on the above are superfluous.

THE INDIAN EXHIBITION.

(COMMUNICATED TO THE "TIMES.")

When it was decided that India was to take part in the exhibition of 1886 letters were addressed by the Prince of Wales to the various Governments and to some of the Princes of India asking for their cordial co-operation. It may be seen from these letters, as well as from other published correspondence, that the Government of India and the various Governments, as well as the Princes of India, were expected to provide a very perfect collection of all the products and manufactures of the country, and that it was desired that India should show its wares to the best advantage in a European market; that the exhibition should be extremely complete, and, in fact, be an advertisement of a valuable kind for India. The government of India was not unwilling that the opportunity thus afforded should be taken to complete a work upon which it had long been engaged—viz., the industrial and economic survey of the country, and believed that in this way (that is, by providing a complete sample collection of Indian wares and productions with a full account of each, the place where made or produced, the uses to which it can be put, &c., including statistics, and, in the case of products, the area of production and the commercial movements) it would best secure the interests of the people of India. It proved, however, that the authorities in London were, from motives of economy, not desirous that India should spend the money necessary for any such collection, notwithstanding the responsibility imposed by the communications received in India.

The Government of India, in accepting the responsibility, seems to have considered that it was not to be stinted in men or money, and it was evidently intended that the government of each Province (each being superior in population and number of exhibits to any one Australian colony) should make its own arrangements. This, however, is, from whatever cause, economy or jealousy of control, not to be, and there may be some disappointment in the provinces on this account. It should be stated that each Australian colony is to be represented by its own agent. Why not, therefore, each province of India in the same manner? The end of it all is that the Government of India is now only to be made responsible for a trade collection, which will, of course, be much cheaper than the full collections at first asked for, and for which sufficient funds have now been sanctioned. It will not be responsible for providing anything more than small samples of each product and class of manufacture, and it is understood that a sufficient sum will be allowed for this purpose, and that the whole of the decorative work, articles de luxe, and more expensive exhibits will be provided by the Royal Commissioners. The Government of India will, in fact, appear only as one of the exhibitors, and not as the furnisher of the Indian Courts, which must now be chiefly equipped by the Royal Commissioners, unless they are to be satisfied with a small and not very attractive looking shop collection. It is, of course, right that the Indian Government should not be saddled with too much of the expense to which the Commissioners may be put in furnishing the Courts with attractive exhibits. It has provided a guarantee for £20,000, in addition to whatever its own exhibit will cost, and the Royal Commissioners will apparently control the funds that can be raised upon this guarantee. Moreover, the Bombay Government will be requested to lend some of the exhibits which have been provided for its own exhibition, now postponed for another year.

SIR HENRY RAWLINSON ON RUSSIA.

Sir Henry Rawlinson has published an article in the Nineteenth Century entitled "The Russian Advance in Central Asia." It commences with the following passage:—"It is easier to write about the Russian advance at the present day than it was a few years back. The ground has been cleared of much of the rubbish which formerly encumbered it. Not long ago the apologists of Russia were wont to compare the progress of her arms in Central Asia with the progress of our own in India. We were warned of a certain law of nature which impelled civilisation to advance on barbarism, and were asked to hail with sympathy, rather than view with suspicion, the extension of a Power which, as it swept on in its restless course, diffused the blessings of order, of knowledge, and of commerce over a vast region hitherto sunk in a savagery of the worst description. But public opinion is now somewhat changed. No one questions that Russia is entitled to great credit for the civilising influence that has attended her progress, for the large benefits she has conferred upon humanity in her career of conquest through Central Asia. By crushing the Turcoman raiders, indeed, and by abolishing the slave markets of Khiva and Bokhara, she has restored peace and prosperity to districts which were groaning in misery, and has earned the gratitude of thousands of terror-stricken families. Whatever may happen in the future, she has gained imperishable glory in the past by her victories of peace along the desolated frontier of Khorassan; but here the register of her good deeds must end. To suppose that she launched her forces across the Caspian in 1869 and engaged in Central Asian warfare with a view to these beneficent results, is to ignore the whole spirit and character of her policy. Fortunately there is now no room for misconception. Her soldiers and statesmen have recently laid bare her springs of action with a plainness that is almost cynical, but at the same time with a fulness of detail that must carry conviction to all unprejudiced minds. It was during the Crimean war, we are told, that Russia first realised her false position in regard to England. In her schemes of aggrandisement in Europe she was liable to be met and thwarted at every turn by British alliances and British influence; and when engaged in war she was open to our attack in every quarter, in the Black Sea, the Sea of Azof, the Baltic, or the coast of Georgia, without any possibility of retaliation. If she was to develop in due course, as had so often been predicted, into the leading Power of the world, it was thus absolutely necessary that the inequality complained of should be redressed. Some weak point in our armour must be discovered. Some means must be found to shatter the palladium of our insular security. Hence there arose the idea of creating a great Oriental satrapy, under Russian administration, which should envelop the north-west frontier of our Indian Empire, and from which, as occasion might arise, pressure could be exerted, or, if necessary, armed demonstrations might issue, which would neutralise British opposition in Europe, and would place our policy on the Bosphorus or elsewhere in subordination to her own. In former times, as is well known, elaborate schemes have been discussed at St. Petersburg for the actual invasion of India, and, if we may judge from the utterances of the Moscow press and the fervid letters of certain Russian generals, the same exalted ideas still prevail in many military circles; but assuredly no such extravagance has been apparent in the careful plan of trans-Caspian operations hitherto adopted by the Russian Government, which has, on the contrary, been of the soberest and most practical character.

"The end in view has been simply to arrive by gradual accretion of territory at the frontier of India. In pursuance of this object Russia has incurred expense, without any immediate prospect of return, to an extent which has filled economists with dismay; fifty millions sterling, at least, having been expended by her in Central Asia during the last twenty-five years. Native rights at the same time have been mercilessly trampled on, and, above all, diplomacy has pushed its privilege of deception far beyond the bounds hitherto recognised as legitimate; but success, which condones all such irregularities, has rewarded her efforts. and the crisis has now arrived, almost sooner than was expected."

THE PAUSE IN AFGHANISTAN.

There is a pause in the negotiations about Afghanistan. The Russian reply has been received in London, and is said to be conciliatory in tone; but the end is not yet reached. The British Government has still to study that reply, which, if Russia is striving to gain time, may be conciliatory only in form, and has also to await the result of the serious negotiations now taking place between Lord Dufferin and Abdurrahman Khan. It is evident, from Lord Hartington's well-weighed speech of Tuesday, that the agreement between England and the Ameer requires much definition; and the long interviews between the negotiators at Rawul Pindi indicate the existence of doubts which may involve references to England. It is inevitable, indeed, that difficulties should exist, for the final settlement of the international boundary, though an essential preliminary to peace does not cover the whole case. It is essential that Herat, which is the key of the new arrangements, should be placed in such a position that Russia cannot seize it by a coup-de-main, and that the people of this country should not suspect every necessary or innocent movement of Russian troops beyond the Caspian of being directed against Great Britain. Even if the Government of St. Petersburg is honest, its generals are ambitious; and Herat may, some day or other, be in the hands of a discontented Afghan governor capable of a perfidious transaction. To place Herat beyond danger, and to give the British Government permanent means of knowing exactly what goes on there, is indispensable; but those ends are exceedingly difficult to secure. Herat can be refortified, and strongly garrisoned by Afghan soldiers whom India will help the Ameer to pay; but that is not quite enough, and it is at the next step that perplexity begins.—Spectator.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

Twenty years ago the Volunteer movement at home was the grand patriotic answer of the English people to the threat of a French invasion. The hour seems now close at hand when a similar movement among the Europeans in India will become the most laudable and practical reply to the menacing attitude of our great antagonist, Russia. It is, therefore, worth our while to inquire to what extent volunteering in India may afford relief to our military system, and thereby strengthen our position in this country. It appears from the latest returns there are under 13,000 Volunteers in the whole of India, including nearly 4,000 men who belong to the several Railway corps, and are not therefore available for general purposes. Now this number is but a fraction of the force we might reasonably reckon on, if Englishmen throughout India would recognise that volunteering has now not merely passed from the stage of a pa-ti-me to that of a duty, but is also fast becoming a necessary act for self-preservation.

From the census of 1881 it appears there are over 70,000 European and Eurasian adult males in this country, exclusive of these in the army. Most of these are able-bodied men. Consequently we may safely estimate that at least 50,000 men are fit to carry arms; and we need hardly say, that if this number were actually enrolled and armed, we should be far better prepared to denude the country of regular troops than we are at the present moment.

Of course, there are certain strategical points that must always be held by regular troops; more especially those where the civil European population is limited. But, on the other hand, there are numerous stations and important positions which, under a proper organisation, might be entrusted entirely to our volunteer soldiers. In Calcutta, for example, there are over 10,000 male Europeans, and nearly 5,000 Eurasians. Surely, from these numbers, Calcutta might furnish at least 5,000 or even 10,000 men for its own defence. In Bombay again, there are, exclusive of the military, over 10,000 European and Eurasian males. Statistics such as these show the great capabilities for self-defence which the civil population affords; and it only remains for Government to utilise this latent power for the common welfare. We feel sure that the English in India, of every shade and every grade, will readily respond to the call, if only the question is taken up in a broad and practical way. We cannot afford any great addition to existing armaments; and as our military resources must be increased to meet an ever-approaching danger, a popular extension of the volunteer system appears the easiest way to attain that end.

Volunteering in India does not possess the attractive aspects which it bears at home. Climate, exhausting work, and scant leisure are deterrents difficult to overcome; so much so, that we cannot reasonably expect the vast majority of citizens to join the force as at present constituted. There are others, especially among the Eurasian community, who cannot afford the expense inseparable from volunteering. The objections of the first class, and the disabilities of the second, must be overcome in one way or another; and if dealt with in a practical and satisfactory manner, there can, we believe, be little doubt that a remarkable impetus will be given to the volunteer movement. Men who have the means, but not the inclination or leisure, for regular drill, the wearing of uniform, and other petty inconveniences, might well be enrolled in a Volunteer Reserve. In fact, we believe Government has now some such scheme under consideration. These men would not be required to parade themselves with uniform, nor would they be required to attend drills, except at their own pleasure; but arms and equipments for every man so enrolled would be issued; and on any great emergency occurring, the Volunteer Reserve might be called out by special proclamation or even by notification from the local authorities. The advantages of such a reserve are that, the men being already enrolled, Government would know exactly what number of men they could count on for internal defence; so that an organisation would be in existence for the reception of these men, and arms, ammunition and equipment will be readily forthcoming instead of being dependent on tardy compliance with "preaudits," "authorised indents," and the other safeguards demanded by circumlocution. Nor can it be said that the men would be useless. The class of Europeans who would join such a reserve are, as a rule, well educated men, who would rapidly acquire such slight knowledge of drill as their duties would demand; while nearly all would be more or less proficient with the use of fire-arms. In fact, they would be men whom a very little drill and a very little target practice would render thoroughly effective for the purposes for which they would be required.

As regards the other class which we have indicated—namely, the poorer Europeans and Eurasians—there seems no reason why we should not form from them companies of militia who should be paid for their services whenever called out for training, as well as when embodied. Such a Militia should have a purely local organisation, and might for economy's sake be affiliated to existing volunteer corps. The details of such a scheme are beyond the province of a newspaper article; but we cannot think that they admit of any insuperable difficulties; while the adoption of such measures as those herein proposed would give us, in every large station in India, a considerable body of armed men fairly trained, and capable of performing many of those duties of precaution which would otherwise have to be taken by soldiers of the regular forces. An addition of 50,000 volunteers and militia would, in all likelihood, then enable us to detach 20,000 men from the garrison army which would otherwise have to be retained. In any case, it will confer on the civil population throughout India that feeling of comparative security which carries with it the maintenance of British prestige, and hinders the growth of groundless panics.

As Major Collen stated in the United Service Institution Prize Essay for 1883;—"Outlying stations and districts, still isolated or comparatively inaccessible, can rarely receive the strength which a British garrison confers, while a disturbance at a single one of such stations might lead to conflagration." Again:—"The formation of volunteer corps at every place where there are European residents, few or many, must be a real increase to the military strength of the empire; for not only would they, in time of trouble, enable the main body of the British troops to be set free for service in the field, but in those places where British troops are not ordinarily stationed, they would be still more valuable. They would there act in maintaining order by their mere existence; and would prevent, not only the disasters and evils attendant on any interruption of the peace of the country, but, in case of heavier troubles, would form a protection to the non-combatant population and to public and private property."

We are not advocating any measures of an ambitious or expensive nature. We do not expect for the result an army of soldiers; but we do anticipate that the imposing fact of 50,000 additional armed Englishmen being prepared to fight for the common weal will add immensely to our prestige in India itself, and will have no little moral effect on those who contemplate the easy disruption of the Indian empire.—Civil and Military Gazette.

THE "EVENING NEWS" ON THE TENANCY BILL.

It ought to be generally known that, even if members of the House of Commons understand little about the Bengal Tenancy Bill it is still a fact, that "out of 228 sections of the original Bill forty-five were omitted, fourteen new sections added, and twenty-two wholly recast in the Select Committee." We, therefore, entirely agree with the resolution passed by the London Committee of Bengal Landholders, to the effect that the Bill ought to have been republished and circulated in the vernacular languages of our Indian fellow-subjects. No one, unless very self-sufficient, pretends to understand English Acts of Parliament. But that is no reason why the natives of India should not be allowed to know what is being enacted by a Bill which touches their most vital interests.

THE PRESENT QUESTION.

To His Excellency the Right Hon. the Earl of Dufferin, K.P., G.C.B., Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

My Lord,—When the news was received in this country that the Ministry had appointed the Earl of Dufferin as successor to Lord Ripon, the fact that your lordship had made questions of Eastern administration, and particularly the affairs of Egypt, your special study was generally remarked upon as a most happy incident of your appointment. We knew that you would come to India, familiar with the financial administration of Mahomedan countries; and the fact, in particular, that your lordship had made Egyptian finance a special subject of your study, filled every one with the hope that in dealing with the great problem of the administration of the land in Bengal you would find little difficulty in mastering the subject, because of its absolute identity with the very same problem you had become familiar with in Egypt. The public expectations from your appointment were heightened, when it was announced that your lordship had chosen for your private secretary, and would be accompanied to India by a gentleman who was a distinguished writer, who also had made the subject of Eastern, and in particular, of Egyptian finance a special study. Your lordship's arrival was preceded, moreover, by the appointment of Sir Auckland Colvin as Finance Minister of the country, who, in addition to his long familiarity with the administration of the land in India, had been for nearly five years the Finance Minister of Egypt, with the administration of its land-revenue as the sole object of his care. For myself, my lord, I confess that I regarded it as a most happy circumstance, that when the great Bengal Land Bill came for final consideration before the Imperial Council, the public would have the satisfaction of seeing with what original power your Excellency—aided by the counsels of the two gentlemen I have named—would deal with the vast interests that are mixed up with this measure. My disappointment has been as deep, as I think the public expectations were well founded. I need not tell your Excellency that the administration of the land in these Provinces, with the rights of the State, the zemindar, and the cultivator respectively, is a problem identical in its origin and its nature with the same question in Egypt. There, as here, it is the Mahomedan law of the khiraj, which we profess to administer. There, as here, the State rights, the rights of the private landlord, and the rights of the cultivator, are questions absolutely identical in their nature, and in the developments they have received. The sole difference is—the lamentable one—that while the land has been most wisely administered in Egypt, its administration in this country has been an utter scandal from the first, for the incompetency by which it has been characterised. For a long time, my lord, the civilian administrators of India could not be made even to understand what the law of the country really was. This uncertainty did not pass away unfortunately, until from the passion for change, which has ever characterised our rule, fatal and wide-reaching mistakes had been made that we have since painfully and in vain laboured to undo. It has now, however, been well understood for at least sixty years, that the relations of the State with the land of India, are exactly the same as those which prevail in every settled Mahomedan country, and are regulated by the very same law. The land law, in all the Ottoman dominions, including Egypt, is the very same law as the land law we are administering in India and is embodied in the same Code, the Fatwa Alunghereee of the Emperor Aurungzebe. It is this Indian Code by which the Porte has for nearly two centuries guided its own administration of the land. The latest authoritative expositor of the Code in English, is Mr. Neil Baillie, who opens the preface of his work (1853) with the following remarkable statement:—

"The most important of the rights acquired by the East India Company, by cessions or conquest from its predecessors in the Government of India, is the khiraj or land-tax, which has existed in that country from early times, and was probably imposed upon it soon after its conquest by the Mahomedans. In Bengal, the right to this tax was conferred upon the Company by an express grant from the Moghul Emperor, Shah Alum, under a Firman bearing date the 12th August, 1765, and neither in that Presidency nor in any other part of India, have the East India Company or their local Governors, ever pretended to any greater rights in respect of this particular tax than belonged to the preceding Governments, under the acknowledged law of the country. It has, therefore, always been considered a matter of importance to ascertain as correctly as possible the nature and limits of that tax, according to the Mahomedan law, which was not only the general law of the country, but was more especially that which determined the right of the Government and the people to each other."

Your Excellency, I have no doubt, is well acquainted with Mr. Baillie's work, and as there is no dispute that the land-revenue of Egypt, as of other Mahomedan lands, is the very same property as the land-revenue of India, your lordship will not ask me to enlarge upon the point.

Now, my lord, this being so, we are confronted with a series of the most startling and extraordinary contrasts between the administration of the land-revenue in Egypt and in India; but as it is in the Bengal Provinces only that the present controversy rages I confine my remarks thereto. Your lordship has doubtless been struck by the fact that there is a remarkable identity of soil in the two countries. The cultivated area of Egypt is the valley and delta of a great river, the Nile. The cultivated area of the Bengal Provinces consists of the valleys and the deltas of three vast river systems, the Ganges, the Brahmapootra, and the Mahanuddee. The physical conditions of the two countries are, for all purposes of this argument, identical. They have practically the same soil, the same climate, and the same striking natural advantages. As might be expected, they grow the very same staples of produce, the advantage of the Bengal Provinces being that the produce is a good deal more varied. Permit me to place the products side by side:—

Egyptian Produce.—Rice, wheat, maize, pulse, cotton, sugar, barley, clover.

Bengal Produce.—Rice, wheat, maize, pulse, cotton, sugar, barley, indigo, silk, jute, opium, betel-nut, cocoanut, potatoes, tobacco, teas, seeds, oils, hides, lac.

Whatever Egypt grows, Bengal grows, and much more. Egypt is heavily handicapped by the want of labour; Bengal teems with it. The population of Egypt, including its urban classes, amounts to but five and-a-half millions of people; the population of Bengal is sixty millions. They occupy respectively precisely the same ratio of cultivated land to population. Five millions of people in Egypt occupy and cultivate five million acres of land. Sixty millions of people here occupy and cultivate sixty to seventy millions. There has been a great extension of railway communication in Egypt, and if the extension here is not yet so wide as there, it soon will be. Bengal has the advantage of a vast internal system of water communications, her Eastern canals alone carrying more goods than the two great railways she possesses, combined. And now, my lord, let me ask you how it is, that it never occurs to you, in these dreary debates in your Council, that you hear from one day's end to another of nothing but rack-rent and oppression of the ryot, under an aggregate demand that averages less than 4s. per acre (Rs.2), while in Egypt, without complaint of any kind the land-revenue alone, excluding the rents of the private proprietors of the ooshr and abaaieh lands, is 20s. per acre with indefinite additions in the shape of corvee or forced labour. The State in Egypt takes £5,000,000 every year as land-revenue (khiraj) from the 5,000,000 acres of land occupied by 5,000,000 people. The State in Bengal takes less than £4,000,000 from 60,000,000 of people, cultivating 60 to 70,000,000 acres, while the whole aggregate demand upon the ryot, of land-revenue and zemindar's rental together, is but £11,000,000, of which the Government itself tells us but £10,000,000 to £11,000,000 are really levied. Let me ask your Excellency to look attentively at these figures:—

Egypt.—State Revenue, £5,000,000; Private Rental, £2,000,000 (Estimate).

Bengal.—State Revenue, £4,000,000; Private Rental, £7,000,000.

In the neighbouring provinces of the North-West, the aggregate of State revenue and zemindar's rental is Rs. 6 the acre, for a soil that is barrenness itself, compared with that of Bengal, where the aggregate is but Rs. 2 the acre. And your lordship can listen, day after day in your Council, to assurances that the ryot is oppressed and rack-rented, by a demand that mocks his just liability, without a single pointed inquiry of Sir Auckland Colvin, or its other members, as to the solution of this strange enigma. Your lordship, no doubt, is aware that so dissatisfied was Sir Auckland Colvin with the demand upon the Egyptian fellaheen that he had begun a great cadastral survey of the country, under the belief that instead of Rs. 12 revenue, the State might without oppression get Rs. 15 per acre. And have we really no right, my lord, to expect that, with your knowledge of these facts, you should inquire closely into these stories of rack-renting oppression that have brought this great measure of confiscation and wrong into your Council? You are making yourself party to a law that is to settle for all time the assessments and rental together in these provinces at 4s. the acre, or less (Rs. 2), and you are doing it with the full knowledge that outside your Council a united community tell you that it is the most deplorable madness. They point your lordship to the fact that the very same demands aggregate Rs. 6 in the poor territories of the North-West, and that the State assessments alone amount to Rs. 12 in Egypt, and your lordship thinks it right to override all remonstrances, to refuse all inquiry and to say simply, "My instructions are to pass the Bill, and pass it I must." My lord, you are making an error more fatal than that of Lord Cornwallis, because you have not the courage to disappoint your Council—who stand alone in the community, or that you really want the insight we so strongly hoped you to possess. You are handing these provinces over to a long and bitter conflict between all classes, because the measure is an unjust one. And in addition to this evil you are introducing a social revolution that will end in reducing Bengal to the same dead level of poverty that exists so widely under our rule, where the private landlord is gone, and a miserable mass of cottiers are ground into the dust by the middleman usurer to whom you are transferring the property of the State on the one hand, and of the zemindar on the other. My lord, I have done. I have fought this land question for nearly thirty years, and in no case yet has the event failed to justify my disregarded warnings. I have often fought almost alone, but to-day a united community protest against what you are doing, and your lordship makes no inquiry, but seems to deem it to be your kismet (destiny) that the ruin should be accomplished. India had a right to hope for something better from Lord Dufferin.—My lord, I am your lordship's faithful servant,

R. KNIGHT.

Statesman and Friend of India, Calcutta, March 7th, 1885.

BENGAL, UPPER INDIA, &c.

AN extensive fire occurred at Mymensingh on Saturday, the 14th ult., resulting in the destruction of a large part of the town and the loss of several lives.

THE MAHARAJAH OF BURDWAN, who was recently operated upon for abscess of the liver, has had a relapse and is in a critical state.

A COURT-MARTIAL will assemble at Rawul Pindi immediately for the trial of Major G. E. Rogers, 1st Dragoon Guards. Brigadier-General Sir Hugh Gough is the president.

ON Wednesday, the 11th ult., Lady Dufferin laid the foundation-stone of a hotel for the accommodation of female medical students in connection with the Calcutta Medical College.

THE train proceeding on the Punjab Northern State Railway with the headquarters of the 2nd Battalion Royal Irish Regiment left the rails. The colonel and adjutant were severely wounded. Three privates were killed, and three wounded.

THE Calcutta Tea Association have telegraphed to the India Tea Districts Association in London, desiring that a strong remonstrance may be made, on behalf of India, against the proposal to add threepence a pound to the tea duty.

THE financial statement for 1885-86 was published on the 17th ult. in the Gazette of India in the form of a minute by Sir Auckland Colvin. The budget estimates of 1885-86 are as follows:—Revenue £72,090,400, Expenditure £71,582,300; Surplus, £508,100.

COLONEL WOOD, Rifle Brigade, met with a bad accident at Meerut on the 11th ult. by his horse falling with him on parade. He lies in a critical state. Captain Neeld, 17th Lancers, when playing polo the same evening, received a blow from a polo stick on the leg, causing severe injuries.

IN reply to the memorial of the residents of Rangoon concerning affairs in Upper Burmah, the Viceroy states that though deeply sensible of the gravity of the situation, he does not consider that the circumstances brought to notice are such as to call for the adoption of the strenuous measures advocated therein.

NEPALESE DEPUTATION.—Lieutenant-Colonel Sher Nur Singh, Rana Bahadur, envoy from Nepal, waited upon his Excellency the Viceroy at 1 P.M. yesterday with a khrueta and the usual presents. He was accompanied by the Nepalese representative at Calcutta, and was received by his Excellency in the throne-room. The deputation was of a private character, congratulating his Excellency on his accession to office.—Englishman.

THE Duke and Duchess of Connaught were entertained at a farewell dinner by Meerut society on Tuesday, the 17th ult. The Duke of Connaught, in responding to the toast proposed in his and the Duchess of Connaught's honour, said that he had been in the country long enough to like it, and that wherever he might be his stay at Meerut would form one of the brightest periods of his life.

THE WALKER CASE.—The Walker case came on on Thursday, the 19th ult. The Judges came to the conclusion that there was no necessity for a re-trial. Laluram Panday said that the conduct of the defendant in offering the insult to Mr. Walker, if intentional, was most reprehensible; but he did not think that, regard being had to definition of offence of insult as given in section 504 of the Penal Code and to all that has occurred in this unfortunate case, any good purpose would be gained by directing a re-trial.

MOFUSSIL NOTES.

(From the Indian Planters' Gazette)

MR. C. R. MARINDIN, C.S., will officiate for Mr. Norman, Collector of Mozufferpore, during the latter's absence on leave.

MR. GRAHAM, who is well known for his ascents in the Himalayas, is about to undertake an expedition to the Congo, accompanied by Boos, the Grindewald guide.

"It's an ill wind that blows no good," and the stoppage of the construction of the Bengal-Nagpore line sends Mr. J. J. Whitty back joyful to his old diggings in Durbungah.

TERRIBLE thing the force of example. On hearing of Mr. Stewart's (Deputy Magistrate of Mozufferpore) collar-bone fracture, Mr. Gilbert Nicolay immediately got his broken.

MR. ST. JOHN KNELLER, who has recently returned from home, will probably accompany the Maharajah of Durbungah's younger brother, Kumar Rameshwar Sing Bahadur, on his intended visit to England.

THE Darjeeling-Himalayan Railway Company has declared a dividend of 6½ per cent. on the year's working. This is by no means a bad result for a line fifty miles long, and yet the shares are only quoted at ninety-two.

DURBUNGAH is not going to have it all its own way in the shooting line, and a party headed by Dr. Hill and Mr. Sealy shortly leave Motihari to beard the tiger in his den round about Trabeni on the Nepal frontier.

THE services of the Behar Light Horse volunteered for the Soudan have been declined by the Viceroy in an autograph letter couched in the kindest spirit, and intimating that the Regiment might be required nearer home.

TRAVELLING on the Hajepore branch of the Tirhoot State Railway through the Dhurmpore Factory lands is becoming dangerous, as the engine occasionally shifts off the line at Mr. Jack Becher's tartan dressing-gown.

IT is quite settled who will—we were going to say—succeed Mr. Showers as Superintendent of Police at Motihari. "Come after" is the proper expression. To "succeed" in Motihari after Mr. Showers would indeed be difficult, but Colonel Hume may as well try.

SOME men have the luck of the devil. What on earth has that commission - to - inquire - into - the - condition - of - our - ministerial - establishments done to be blessed by the addition to it of Mr. John Beames, C.S.? There will be a terrible scramble to get on that commission now.

THE annual inspection of the D, C, and B Companies, N.B.R.V., is fixed to come off on the 11th, 12th, and 13th instant respectively. No date has been finally decided on for the inspection of the A Company, but the event will probably take place on Saturday, the 21st.

DISASTER has been rife amongst the Civilian element in Mozufferpore. No sooner is the popular Judge, Mr. Brett, out of the fire of a dangerous fever into the frying-pan of measles, than Mr. Stewart, the Deputy Magistrate, breaks his collar-bone—accidentally, of course.

THERE is every probability of the Behar Light Horse forming part of the force to be assembled at Rawul Pindi on the occasion of the Cabul Amir's approaching visit. The whole thing will be a very swagger function, and well worth the long journey north. Besides this, it is a capital opportunity for the Regiment to show itself out of Bengal.

MR. A. G. C. THOMPSON, Engineer, of Windsor Tea Estate, Darjeeling, has been granted a patent for "improvements in machinery or apparatus for the rolling of, twisting, and winking of tea leaves or other analogous substances, such improvements greatly increasing the value of the substance operated upon." Mr. Thompson is the patentee of the "Challenge" tea-rolling machine.

PITY THE SORROWS OF A POOR TEA-PLANTER.—While the tea-planters of Assam and Cachar are let off with the comparatively light task of filling up only six registers containing seventy-four columns for the information of Government, their professional brethren in Chittagong are worked up to the full tilla of eight registers and 137 columns. After that who can say that the Government does not take a step-fatherly interest in the tea-planters and his servant and his maid and all that is his?

The Teesta Valley Tea Company has realised an average price of Rs. 0-13-1 on its 1884 tea crop. The Gielle and Soom Tea Companies are not far behind this in their average prices for the year. Although no definite figures as to the average prices realised for the Darjeeling tea crop of 1884 are available yet, it may safely be predicted that the result will be found to be not less than nine annas per lb., or very nearly an anna over the average of Cachar and Assam.

MADRAS.

The Madras Artillery Volunteers have offered to join the garrison of Fort St. George should their services be required.

A MEETING of the native editors of Madras has been held, when it was decided to observe moderation of language when criticising the actions and policy of Government.

The Governor of Madras has been indisposed, and the usual weekly meeting of the Council has had to be postponed.

THE EURASIAN COMMUNITY.—Mr. D. S. White left Madras on the 16th ult. for Calcutta on the invitation of the Viceroy to discuss the grievances of the Eurasian and East Indian community.

CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.—In submitting to Government a copy of a letter from the Principal of the Civil Engineering College, reporting on the results of the examination for certificate as Assistant Engineer held in December, 1884, Mr. Grigg, Director of Public Instruction, says:—"I consider the results very creditable to Captain Love and his staff. The question of providing adequate and suitable accommodation for the Civil Engineering College is one of much importance. If funds for a new building are not likely to be available ere long, possibly it may be desirable to rent premises." The Government remarks that "the results of the examination are highly gratifying. The Director will be informed that there is no prospect of becoming available during next year for the construction of a Civil Engineering College."—Madras Mail.

THE MADRAS UNIVERSITY.—A convocation of the University was held on the 18th ultimo, Mr. Grant Duff being present as Chancellor. Diplomas were presented to one M.L., twenty-nine B.L.'s, one M.D., one M.B. and C.M., four L.M.S., three B.C.E.'s, six M.A.'s, and 168 B.A.'s. There were two Mahomedan graduates. Last year there were none. The Hon. P. O'Sullivan, the retiring Advocate-General, delivered an address to the students, encouraging them by stating his belief that openings for educated natives would increase with education, especially in connection with medical science. He pointed out that Madras was not singular in producing more graduates than could at present find suitable employment, for such was the case in other countries. Government, he said, were going to close the service to others than graduates after the 1st of May. The best efforts of the educated men of this country were necessary to develop its resources for its increasing population. Local self-government was doing much for the benefit of the people, especially by the extension of education.

THE MADRAS VOLUNTEER ARTILLERY.—On Wednesday, after drill, the men of the Madras Volunteer Artillery, now in camp, through Sergeant Upshon, who was the spokesman for the occasion, expressed to their Commandant, Major Spring Branson, their willingness to garrison Fort St. George in the event of the services of the Artillery now garrisoning the Fort being needed elsewhere. Major Branson was greatly pleased at the spirit thus evinced by his battery, and promised to bring their offer to the notice of Government.—Times.

BOMBAY.

It has just been discovered that a number of letter sorters on the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway have been systematically robbing the mail-bags.

The fund which is being raised with the object of commemorating Sir James Fergusson's connection with this presidency now exceeds Rs. 20,000.

MR. LEE-WARNER, C.S., has been appointed Director of Public Instruction in Bombay during the absence of Mr. Chatfield.

At a meeting of the Bombay Millowners' Association it was decided that it would be to the advantage of the cotton industry to close the mills one day in seven.

A LARGE and influential meeting in aid of the Guzerat College Fund was held in Bombay on the 12th ult., under the presidency of the Hon. J. B. Peile. Several handsome subscriptions in aid of the fund were announced.

ADMIRAL SIR W. HEWETT, the Naval Commander-in-Chief of the East Indies, arrived in Bombay in his flagship, the Euryalus, from Colombo on the 18th ult.

LIEUT.-GENERAL MERRIMAN, R.E., secretary to the Bombay Government, in the Public Works Department, has been appointed chairman of the executive committee of the Bombay International Exhibition.

DURING the month of January 240,545 cwt. of wheat, valued at Rs. 9,13,608, were shipped from ports in Sind.

SIR JAMSETJEE JEJEEBHAY, Bart., C.S.I., gives an evening party on the 24th instant at his residence, Mazagon Castle, in honour of the retiring Governor.

MR. HENRY A. HANDLEY PAYNE, son of Mr. H. W. Payne, of this city, was admitted a solicitor of the High Court on the 13th ult. He will join the firm of Messrs. Payne, Gilbert and Sayani.

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL W. J. MOORE, C.I.E., is appointed Surgeon-General with the Government of Bombay, vice Surgeon-General T. B. Beatty, whose period of service expires on the 1st proximo.

THE ballot at the Chamber of Commerce on Friday, the 13th ult., for the election of two Port Trustees resulted in the election of the Hon. F. Forbes Adam, of Messrs. W. and A. Graham and Co., and Mr. John Y. Lang, of Messrs. Lang, Moir and Co.

H.E. SIR JAMES FERGUSSON, replying to a farewell address presented to him in Bombay on the 14th ult. by the Anjumani-i-Ahbab, made an incidental reference to the strained relations existing between England and Russia, stating that the Queen's Government is strong enough to resist the encroachments of any neighbour, however powerful.

MR. W. E. HART delivered an interesting and instructive lecture on "English Epics" at the Sassoon Mechanics' Institute on Wednesday, the 18th ult., his Excellency Sir James Fergusson presiding. The lecturer endeavoured to show the origin of English epics, and drew attention to the commencement of a change in the structure of English verse, and to the tendency to relax the rule of alliteration. His Excellency the Governor, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Hart, mentioned an instance that came to his notice when he was Governor of New Zealand, as showing how the oldest stories of the world were handed down until they were embodied in books. He said that the old men of the Maori tribe, who 500 years before had migrated to New Zealand from one of the islands of the Pacific Ocean, were accustomed to maintain the history of their race, including the names of those who had come in certain canoes, the names of the canoes, and so forth, by joining to each other the stories of the past, which were thus preserved from one generation to another.

PRODUCE MARKETS.

INDIAN TEA.—Messrs. G. White and Co. report as follows on the Tea Market, from March 26th to the 2nd inst.:—Smaller sales have been held on account of the near approach of the holidays. Prices have ruled much as last week, steady rates having been obtained for all desirable parcels. Duty payments continue to be excessively heavy, being still about double the usual rate. There were 84,000 packages of Indian and Ceylon growth printed during March against 62,600 packages for the same month last year, so that about 57 millions of this season's crop have been printed, and nearly all sold, against about 51 millions to April 1, 1884. Ceylon.—There has been a larger selection offering, which has comprised some very useful parcels, and there has been spirited competition for them, full prices having been realised for them. On the other hand some invoices are still of inferior quality, and sell at comparatively low averages.

THE NEW SEASON.—The last reports from the Assam tea district are good, and should the weather continue favourable, a somewhat earlier season than that of last year may be anticipated.—Tea Gazette.

The two Indian regiments which proceeded to Egypt, viz., the 17th Bengal Infantry and the 15th Sikhs, were respectively 90 and 50 under strength when the weakly men had been deducted. This is highly satisfactory, as these two regiments, of course, were taken at random from the whole Army. Indian regiments are always kept at their full establishment nominally, and seldom fall much below it, in spite of all that has been said lately about the difficulty of recruiting. The whole Army do not average more than 15 men per regiment under strength; and though of course, some are weaker than others, many, like the 45th (Rattray's) Sikhs—which, by the way, gave a draft to the 15th—are always up to strength, and have men ready to fill vacancies. Most of these regiments are in cantonment far from their recruiting-grounds, and only get their recruits in batches, so that there is always a chance of a regiment being under strength at a particular time; but that two regiments, after a very searching medical inspection, should only require 150 men to make them up to full strength for a particular arduous service is very reassuring, when compared with regiments in similar circumstances in England.—Army and Navy Gazette.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

—o—

Furlough of native regiments proceeding to the camp at Rawul Pindi has been stopped.

MAJOR-GENERAL A. CARNEGIE, commanding Northern Division, is allowed furlough to Australia for six months on medical certificate.

THE Army Head-quarters offices close at Calcutta on the 16th and reopen at Rawul Pindi on the 25th March.

THE rumour that glanders had broken out in the horses of the 18th Bengal Cavalry, at Hassan Abdul, is incorrect. The regiment was inspected by First Class Veterinary Surgeon Langhurst, A. V. D., on the 8th ult. and found to be free from any symptoms of the disease.

IN order to prevent the re-enlistment of a Pathan who has been dismissed the service for misconduct, or of a Pathan of known bad character who has taken his discharge, the officer commanding his regiment is instructed to send a careful descriptive roll of the man, giving, whenever possible, indelible marks, to the commanding officers of all regiments which are allowed under G.O. 9 of 1883 to enlist Pathans.

THE Lahore correspondent of the Times of India telegraphed on the 16th ult.:—From Rawul Pindi I hear that it is probable a leading Lahore barrister will defend Major Rogers at the forthcoming court-martial. Much sympathy is expressed with this officer by all ranks.

AT a general court martial, at Rawul Pindi on the 16th of February, Sepoy Chamni Khan, of the 21st Punjab Infantry, was found guilty of having used criminal force to his superior officer, Naique Mahomed Hussain, by discharging at him a rifle loaded with ball cartridges, whereby he wounded the said naique and caused his death. He was sentenced to be hanged, and the sentence has been confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief.

PROPOSALS for organising the Reserves of the Native Army will, a contemporary understands, be at once submitted to the home authorities; and the final adoption or rejection of the scheme proposed will depend upon the views taken by the Secretary of State and the Horse Guards.

PRIVATES CURTIS and OVERSTEAL, of the 12th Lancers, were tried by court-martial at Bangalore, on the 17th ultimo, for committing a criminal assault on Mrs. Barwell, near the South Station Hospital, on the night of the 27th of December. The accused were on guard at the hospital at the time of the occurrence. Both are very young. Several witnesses testified against the accused, who were identified by Mrs. Barwell. The long time which has elapsed between the committal of the offence and the trial of the accused gave rise to considerable scandal, as it appeared as if the military authorities were trying to hush the matter up.

TWO companies of the Oxfordshire Light Infantry, under the command of Major Vesey, and two companies of the 12th Native Infantry, under the command of Captain Wilkinson, returned to Bangalore by train from Mulliapuram on Friday, the 13th ult., and the Oxfordshire Regiment have received an intimation by private telegram that they will be placed in orders in a couple of days to proceed to Quetta for service in Afghanistan.

IT is notified that the Government of India are no longer prepared to purchase cast mares of British mounted corps and native cavalry regiments. Cast mares will, in future, without exception, be disposed of together with cast horses.

IT has been decided that this summer a guard of honour for their Excellencies the Governor and the Commander-in-Chief of Madras should be furnished by the 10th Regiment Madras Native Regiment, at Vellore, instead of by one of the corps in garrison at Trichinopoly as last year. The party will leave Vellore, part on the 2nd and part on the 3rd of next month, and proceed to Mettapolliam, where the first detachment will await the arrival of the 2nd, and the whole then march on to Ootacamund. The strength of the company will be one European officer, two native officers, and 100 rank and file, and they will be quartered in Government buildings on Castle Hill.

MR. W. JEFFERIES, one of the original non-commissioned officers of the Bombay Rifle Volunteer Corps, and for the past six years colour-sergeant of "B" Company, has been unanimously elected lieutenant of "A" Company, upon accepting the invitation of the members to become a candidate for the appointment. In "B" Company the lieutenant vacancies created by the promotion of Captain Brown and the resignation of Lieutenant A. B. Anderson will be filled by Lance-Corporal T. M. English and Mr. J. A. Savage, the headmaster of the Cathedral High School, who have been chosen by the majority of the members. The necessary papers have been forwarded to Government.

A COCHIN paper learn that "Sir Frederick Roberts has recommended to the Government of Madras the enlistment in Malabar of a native force of six hundred men, under the command of First-Class Police Inspector Ahmed Ghurukul Khan Bahadoor; and that his Excellency was moved to offer this suggestion in view of the numerous cares and engagements of an imperial nature, which engross the regular Indian Army, and of the turbulent and threatening attitude of the Moplahs in Malabar. The Governor of Madras has placed the matter before Mr. Logan, our Collector, for his consideration; and we believe that, though Mr. Logan approves of the scheme in the abstract, he is not of opinion that the details, which enter into the plans of the Commander-in-Chief, should be entirely adopted, or that their adoption would be altogether prudent and efficient."

Miscellaneous.

THE severe wound received by Major Divie Robertson in the engagement at Hasheen having incapacitated him for duty, his place with the 9th Bengal Cavalry, under Colonel Palmer, will be taken by Captain George Lindsay Garstin. Major Robertson is a well-known Indian officer, and gained the medal, with clasp, for his services in the Bhootan Expedition of 1865-66. The regiment was formerly known as the "1st Regiment of Hodson's Horse," and is one of the most efficient cavalry corps of the Bengal Army.—Broad Arrow.

INFORMATION received privately in Calcutta repeats the contradiction already given officially to the rumours regarding the native troops at Cawnpore. It is further stated as a proof of the healthy feeling among the troops that a number of the men of the 6th Bengal Cavalry volunteered for service in the Sudan. Two non-commissioned officers actually gave up their stripes to go as privates with the draft which joined the 17th Bengal Infantry.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL has met with unexpectedly strong opposition. Even tea planters are against it. A large meeting was held at Siligree on the 23rd, at which resolutions antagonistic to the measure were unanimously passed.—Tea Gazette.

IN their extreme gratitude to Providence for having safely brought them through the perils of a quarter-mile spin on the flat in a regimental pony race, three 9th Lancers forgot to weigh in, and consequently had to go through the same terrible risks again. The trio had mistaken their profession. They were born for the Church.

INDIAN MAHOMEDANS AND THE MAHDI.—The Sahachar has the following:—There are fifty millions of Mahomedans in India. It is not surprising that there should be some among this vast number who recognise the Mahdi as a prophet. But, according to the best of our knowledge, the Mahomedans of India as a body do not believe that the Mahdi is a real prophet. We know the Mahomedans regret the death of General Gordon equally with the Hindu and Christian subjects of Her Majesty.—Pioneer.

UNDETERRED by any fears of Russian intrusion, distant Kohat advertises a Sky Meeting to be held on the 8th and 10th of April. Any Bengal sportsman desirous of fresh fields, &c., might take a run up to this frontier meeting, where the garrison is always all things to all men, but by the time the Bengal sportsmen arrived the garrison might be on the war-path.

THE Detachment, 19th Punjab Infantry, Amritsar, has been relieved by a detachment of the 28th Punjab Infantry from Jullundur, under command of Major D'Acosta-de-St. Laurent. Major D'Acosta-de-St. Laurent has been appointed Station Staff Officer, Amritsar.

MAJOR F. C. BURTON, 1st Bengal Cavalry, Brigade-Major, Mooltan, has been appointed Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Cavalry Division under General Sir Hugh Gough, V.C., K.C.B., at Rawul Pindi.

THE Bacchante, unarmoured corvette, will be commissioned at Portsmouth on April 14 by Captain Moore, last in command of the Firefly, as the flagship of Admiral Sir Frederick Richards in the East Indies. The Euryalus, which was recommissioned at Malta in January, 1882, will return to England on being relieved by the Bacchante.

THE FERGUSSON COLLEGE.—It is stated that the Fergusson College will be built after the style of the Deccan College, with a clock-tower, and that the construction of the building will be entered upon within as short a time as possible.—Deccan Herald.

IT is stated that an order has been received in Calcutta from the Russian Government for the supply of certain Anglo-native newspapers in Bengal.

SOWINGS are in full swing in Purneah, the weather on the whole having been rather favourable, as the slight drizzle there was a week ago did not cake the surface soil, and the west winds have not as yet set in with their usual fury.

TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 1885.

LORD ROSEBERY ON OUR RUSSO-AFGHAN POLICY.

AT Manchester, last Wednesday, Lord Rosebery made a public statement in regard to the distinguishing features of the Russo-Afghan policy of Lord Beaconsfield's Government as compared with that of Mr. Gladstone, which (we make bold to say), if put forward in private conversation among any persons acquainted with the facts, whether Liberals or Conservatives, would have been received either with derisive laughter or with indignation. His lordship said, "Our policy," that is, Mr. Gladstone's, "is to maintain our treaty engagements with the Ameer;" while of Lord Lytton's policy he said, "The policy of the last Government was to oppress and crush and harass Afghanistan." For the sake of English truthfulness we are glad to see that this last astounding statement was received, even in the meeting of the National Reform Union, with a cry of "No," and some interruption; but if the Times report is as accurate as it usually is, we cannot but fear that the honesty of the interrupters was quickly overborne by the miserable party-spirit evoked by the amazing audacity of the mis-statement. The facts being before the world, not only in Blue-books and newspapers, but in histories and in the memories of many thousands of Englishmen, it is impossible to understand how any one in Lord Rosebery's position could make in public such a statement, which he certainly would not dare to make in private. Unhappily, however, the experience of the Midlothian campaign has taught us that, in Indian matters, at least, the effect of a statement on British public opinion is measured, not by its truth or falsehood, but by the skill with which it is put forward, and by the popularity of the speaker. For instance, in regard to the Indian Vernacular Press Act, Mr. Gladstone in his speech at Dalkeith made a statement which was absolutely opposed to the known and undeniable facts; this was promptly pointed out in a letter in the Times, but it would be absurd to suppose that the contradiction ever overtook the original misstatement, or even had any appreciable effect in neutralising its poison. And so, doubtless, in regard to many other of the unmeasured utterances of that orgy of "irresponsible" rhetoric. And this reflection—which can hardly have escaped the observation of so acute a politician as Lord Rosebery—might surely have made the junior member of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet cautious as to the accuracy of his statements about Russo-Afghan policy.

For what really are the facts? Can there be any really serious dispute about them? Will the Duke of Argyll, who was Mr. Gladstone's Indian Secretary of State, seriously state that his policy was one of "maintaining our treaty engagements with the Ameer"? Why, the whole point at issue in those days was, that the Conservative party wished for a treaty with the Ameer, wished to back up Sher Ali clearly and firmly, and then to "maintain our treaty engagements" with him; while Mr. Gladstone and the Duke of Argyll positively, and even angrily, refused to have any treaty at all to maintain! The leading shibboleth of the Liberal party at that time, in this matter, was, "No treaty!" And when Sher Ali implored Lord Northbrook to grant him a treaty, and when every Conservative wished to see this done—and even Lord Northbrook himself thought it might be done—and poor Nur Muhammad prayed for it with all the earnestness he was capable of—the Home Ministry sent out that famous fatal telegram, in which Lord Northbrook was peremptorily ordered on no account to give the unhappy Ameer a treaty, because Mr. Gladstone's Government did not "share his (the Ameer's) apprehensions about Russia!" Are these things unknown to Lord Rosebery, or even to the National Reform Union?—are they not recorded in Blue-books, and utterly and entirely beyond dispute? And yet Lord Rosebery can stand up and unblushingly say "our policy is to maintain our treaty engagements with the Ameer"!

Nor is the statement, that the policy of the late Government was "to oppress and crush and harass Afghanistan," one whit less disingenuous in the spirit, though in the letter capable of being supported with less apparent strain on the facts. The policy of the late Government was simply and solely devoted to the undoing of the mischievous and deplorable results of that fatal Gladstonian telegram of the Duke of Argyll's, which had so reasonably and justly embittered the Ameer Sher Ali. As to Sher Ali's feelings on this point, there is abundant evidence—and none better than the recorded words of his own son, Yakoob Khan. From the moment of Lord Lytton's arrival in India, the first object of his Government—pursued, as we all know, with the utmost warmth and earnestness, and never lost sight of—was to obtain a revival of those friendly relations with Afghanistan which had been established by Lord Mayo, and had been so wantonly broken by the Gladstone policy in 1873. That success in these efforts was only possible after a change of ruler could hardly be surprising, considering the bitterness of the treatment poor Sher Ali had received from Lord Northbrook's Government, and the assiduity with which his friendship had been cultivated by the wiser Government of St. Petersburg. But to say that the war, which was at last rendered inevitable by the presence of the Russian Embassy at Kabul, the repulse of our own Mission, and the Russo-Afghan treaty excluding English influence from Afghanistan, was due to a desire "to oppress and crush and harass Afghanistan," is to state that which is belied by every Blue-book, and every fact of the case. We had supposed that these malignant libels, born in Midlothian, had received their quietus when the documentary evidence of the Russo-Afghan intrigues found by Sir Frederick Roberts at Kabul was published.

That they should ever be revived is only another instance of the unbounded confidence that seems to be placed in the forgetfulness and gullibility of the British public by the Liberal leaders. That they should be revived by such a man as Lord Rosebery is disappointing; but that they should be revived just now, when the Liberal party has all too tardily adopted the Conservative policy, is positively indecent.

The surroundings of Lord Rosebery's unfortunate remarks were somewhat appropriate. Not a single person of even mediocre position in politics, save Lord Rosebery himself, seems to have attended this notable meeting; all the celebrities had with one accord begged to be excused. Mr. Lalmohun Ghose indeed came; but the Times says that he "confined his observations to a brief statement of the advantages conferred upon India by the Liberal Administration of Lord Ripon"—a statement obviously capable of being compressed within a very brief compass, indeed. Mr. Hopwood, M.P., spoke in "high praise of the diplomacy of Lord Granville, especially in what might he termed the Bismarck episode!"—so the Times report declares, apparently in all seriousness, incredible as it may seem. The only other speaker of whom we hear anything was Mr. Armitage; but he excelled all the rest, for he traced the "Egyptian troubles of the Government" (including, of course, the death of Gordon) to "the unwise purchase of the Suez Canal shares by the previous Government!" and also pointed out that April 1st (All Fools' Day) was "the anniversary of the great election-day, five years ago, when the voice of so large a number of constituencies sealed the fate of the late Conservative Government." This pleasing and appropriate reminiscence appears to have delighted the assembled representatives of the National Reform Union; and their cheers confirmed the President's selection of All Fools' Day as the great annual jéte of the Radical party.

A TRUMPET.

Malo periculosam libertatem quam tutam servitiam.—

Sallust.

Tut, man! The bugle-note blew clear;
The tented field's your place; not here,—
But foot to foe.

Are Nelson and St. Vincent dead,
And, with them, English courage fled
To Death's broad moor?

Are we to budge, and duck, and bow,
Like camels, driven anyhow,
As statesmen will?

Their song of "Perish India," grows;
And they'll repeat to laughing foes
Majuba's Hill?

Our flag, that swam in battle's frown,
Shall call upon the sea to drown
Her memories;

And we turn spinsters. Is it meet
To spin cash in Threadneedle Street,
While England sinks?

My gallant hearts! It is not so,
To death or victory we will go
Whilst sunlight burns;

But first will fling, as chaff aside,
Gladstone and all the crew, who tried
To scuttle-ship.

Then, with a scabbard tossed in air,
Try what in India and elsewhere,
Russ, Pruss, or Frank can do

DOVER CAMP.

COLONEL WALTER, resident in Meywar, laments that he is unable to announce in his latest Administration Report the sending of any new pupils from that State to the Mayo College. There are many sons of leading nobles at an age suitable for entering the College; "but education is thought very little of in Meywar, and the higher the rank of the individual the less attention seems to be paid to this important subject."

It has been a matter of surprise to most people, says the Indian Tea Gazette, that the war which has now for so long been raging between France and China has not hitherto affected, apparently, the price of Indian tea; but there are signs that it is beginning to do so, and another noticeable fact is, that while prices for Chinas are declining, those for Indians are rising. The meaning is this (and it is most satisfactory and encouraging one), that the falling off in the supplies of Chinas have led to a larger use of, and reliance upon, Indians; and these latter having been found to give more real value for money, the demand which has set in bids fair to go on increasing. The difficulty hitherto has been to get our teas into direct consumption. So long as they were high priced this proved of slow progress, but our increased production has enabled us to accept, without loss, lower rates; until now we are actually able to compete with China even in the matter of price; and it is beginning to be found that "mixing" is now no longer necessary.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, March 27th; Madras and Allahabad, March 25th; Calcutta, March 24th; Burma, March 20th.

THE petition to the Indian Government, signed by some 400 influential Native gentlemen of Calcutta, praying that their services may be accepted as Volunteers, is a most interesting and gratifying historical event. Occurring, as it does, simultaneously with a most remarkable outburst of loyalty from the princes and great nobles of India, at a critical moment in the fortunes of the Empire, it affords the best possible answer to those pessimists who have been continually croaking about the unsatisfactory character of the British Indian Administration, and the discontent and disaffection of the Indian peoples. Doubtless, like many other sections of Her Majesty's subjects, some classes of the Native population have always got grievances; but that need not make them, any more than the rest of us, disloyal. Since the proclamation of the Queen as Empress of India, every native-born Indian has been able to feel that, in paying homage to Her Majesty, he is fulfilling the sacred religious duty of showing personal loyalty to his own rightful Sovereign. The Hungarians, naturally and properly, entertained a sentiment of devotion to Maria Theresa as Queen of Hungary, very different from that which they could possibly have felt for the Empress of the Holy Roman Empire; and Englishmen ought to have the warmest sympathy for that honourable spirit which is now rallying all ranks of our Indian fellow-subjects around their Empress, who is also our Queen. Let us frankly and cordially respond to these loyal advances. If there are difficulties in the question of Indian volunteering, it is the duty of the Government to surmount them—not indeed by shirking or ignoring them, but by devising means of conquering them. There are difficulties too, doubtless, in the way of our adequately utilising the armies of the Frontier and Feudatory Princes in the defence of the Common Empire; but these difficulties ought to be overcome.

THE example of the Maharajah of Darbhanga is being nobly followed throughout British India. And among our feudatories, the lead of the Nizam, the Begum of Bhopal, and the great Phulkian Maharajahs, has also been followed in every Native State. The great Himalayan State of Kashmir vies with the Rajput principalities, with the Sikh States of the Punjab, with the Mahrattas and Jats of Central India and Bombay, with Mysore and Travancore, and the Muhammadan States throughout the peninsula. And to complete the picture of Imperial unity and strength, we shall see, under the banners of the Indian Empire, the troops of the great frontier States of Nepal, of Kelat, and of Afghanistan.

Nor less gratifying than this volunteering loyalty is the tone of the Native Press. We rejoice to observe that the Voice of India, that enterprising and valuable summary of the Native Press, prepared in Bombay by Mr. B. M. Malabari, declares unreservedly, "The vernacular Press gives Russia a very bad character, and regrets that the British Government has so long played into her hands."

APROPOS of the Indian vernacular Press, we would call our readers' attention to a very valuable and exhaustive Indian Press Guide, called also, "The Eastern Advertisers' Handbook," which has been prepared and published by the well-known advertising agents, Messrs. R. Anderson and Co., of 14, Cockspur-street, S.W. This capital handbook gives a most complete account of the whole Indian and Oriental Press, both English and vernacular.

It will, of course, be carefully studied by all those who have occasion to advertise in the East—and will be found useful by even a wider circle.

We have received with great pleasure a copy of the petition of the London Chamber of Commerce in favour of Imperial Federation. On the back of the petition is printed a most valuable collection of statistics, which prove the urgent importance of the question beyond the possibility of a doubt.

THERE are many other "moderate Liberals" besides Colonel Howard Vincent, late the intended Liberal candidate for Westminster, who, having made a tour in India and the colonies, "come back to England literally aghast at the deliberate neglect of British interests in almost every quarter of the globe during the past five years." And Colonel Vincent has the courage and honesty to act on his convictions; and, as he writes, "to devote his political life to the national cause of the Conservative party, which is at least resolved to stand shoulder-to-shoulder with their countrymen, rich and poor, all the world over, for the maintenance of the power of Great Britain and the advancement of the individual welfare of her sons."

THE Englishman has the following account of the Calcutta Freight Market, corrected to March 24:—

We have hardly any change to report in our freight market since last mail. A moderately fair amount of business has been done at previous rates in steamers and sailing ships for London; there is very little demand for any other ports. Our unfixed tonnage stands reduced to 10,000 tons.

THE following on the Calcutta Indigo Market is taken from Messrs. W. Moran and Co.'s Market Report:—

Our advices from Behar are generally favourable. Sowings are now nearly completed, and the plant is reported to be looking very healthy, and the late re-sowings are coming on well. We hear from only one or two factories in Monghyr and Chuprah of the young plant having suffered from the west winds, and where irrigation is necessary. In Lower Bengal rain is still much wanted, but from all accounts the plant is holding out well.

THE same firm gives the following account of the Calcutta Tea Market:—

The auctions held on Thursday, the 19th instant, consisted to a great extent of final invoices, and comprised a total of 2,808 packages, all of which, with the exception of ninety-nine packages, found buyers, at fully last sale rates. As the bulk of the tea was of inferior quality, there was consequently a good competition for the few desirable lots offered, which realised very full rates. Reports received from the gardens concerning the coming crop do not indicate an earlier season than last year. Rain is still much wanted in the Doars and Darjeeling, but in Cachar and Sylhet they have at last had a fair fall. Assam in some parts has also been favoured in this respect, but only partially.

THE Times of India has the following obituary till the departure of the mail, March 27th:—

Sir Vere Levinge, Bart., Madras Civil Service, retired; the Maharajah of Burdwan.

In reply to an inquiry from the Commander-in-Chief for India as to the disposal of officers who vacate their appointments under recent regulations, and who desire to reside in India under G.G.O. No. 23 of 1885, the Government of India has ruled that these officers are available for military duty if required, and accordingly should be treated as general duty officers, with this exception, that they have a more extended sphere of selection for their intended residence.

It is rather an old joke that the ticket-of-leave man sometimes speaks mysteriously to friends who know not his antecedents of the days when he "wore Her Majesty's uniform." The audaciousness of this hyperbole was surpassed the other day, says our Allahabad contemporary, when a traveller claimed the hospitality of a Deputy Commissioner, on the score of his having recently been "putting up" with a common acquaintance—the Superintendent of the Central Jail. It was not until after his guest was gone that the Deputy Commissioner discovered he had been entertaining a European vagrant fresh from the workhouse.

Telegraphic Intelligence.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent at Calcutta, dated April 12:—

"The news of the Russian attack on Penjdeh has caused a profound sensation throughout India. When it was first received it was looked upon as putting an end to all hope of a peaceful solution of the question. Although more recent telegrams seem to indicate that there is still some possibility of the negotiations being continued, there is a general belief that the situation is most critical, and that the present tension cannot continue much longer. For a month past it has been commonly believed here that the Russian object is solely to gain time to push up troops and supplies; and the Ministry is often blamed for not having sent, in the beginning of March, an ultimatum, giving Russia a fixed time to choose peace or war. The Penjdeh affair is considered a proof that the Russian commanders think the time has arrived for throwing off the mask and assuming an aggressive attitude.

"Offers of help continue to pour in from the native Princes, the most important being that of the Court of Nepaul. Nor are these offers confined to Princes. The wealthy men of all races and classes are giving the most convincing proofs of loyalty by liberal tenders of pecuniary help. The remarks of the native Press on the subject are thus summed up in the magazine The Voice of India:—

"Most of the newspapers are convinced that, in spite of protestations to the contrary, Russia has an eye on Afghanistan, and that her present movements are a development of a design long cherished in secret.

"Many native journalists believe that Russia means to absorb at least the outlying portions of Afghanistan. Some allege that this absorption is preliminary to the invasion of India. A few writers, on the other hand, think that this aggressive foreign policy is meant to weaken the popular disaffection which prevails throughout the Czar's dominions, and do not see how her taking Herat would endanger the British Indian Empire.

"But the sense of the native Press, as a whole, is against Russia. The writers insist that the long-standing difference between that country and England, which has now come to a point, must be settled once for all. They urge the British Government to strengthen the hands of the Ameer, and to stand by him so long as he deserves support. If there is to be a collision, it had better take place now than at a more inconvenient time.

"The Princes and people of India are devotedly attached to the British Crown, and burn to prove their loyal trust in England. The Government should avail itself of this magnificent vote of confidence, raise a national volunteer corps, promote qualified native gentlemen to higher ranks in the army, and give the natives a larger share in the administration of the country.

"The approach of Russia has given the more thoughtful native journalists an opportunity of comparing British rule with Russian. The verdict goes entirely in favour of the British. Despite the defects in practical administration, the principles guiding the Government of India are those best suited to the requirements of progressive civilisation. The tendency of British rule is to secure the happiness of British subjects by peace, education, and development. No other foreign rule could offer such advantages—certainly not that of the Power with whom we are now at variance. The vernacular Press gives Russia a very bad character, and regrets that the British Government has so long played into her hands."

"The above fairly summarises the tone of the native Press and the educated classes. It is perfectly evident that this tone is adopted in all sincerity, and from a deep-seated conviction that India has nothing to gain and everything to lose by a change of masters."

"The question of admitting natives to the Volunteer corps has come prominently before the public during the last fortnight, and has derived additional interest from the state of affairs beyond the frontier. The immediate exciting cause of the present discussion has been the action of Major Branson, commanding the Madras Volunteer Artillery, in permitting four native gentlemen to join his battery—a step which is said to have met with the disapproval of Colonel Ross Church, the commandant of the Madras Volunteers, but to be generally approved by the European members of the corps. However this may be, the general question of the admission of natives is attracting much discussion in the newspapers, and some 400 influential native gentlemen of Calcutta have petitioned the Government to accept their services as Volunteers. The existing rule, I believe, is, that while the formation of separate corps, or even companies of natives, is not permitted, there is nothing to prevent them joining the ranks with their European fellow-citizens. As a matter of fact, however, there are now very few, if any, native Volunteers. The question is one which presents some difficulty; but it is impossible to avoid sympathising with the loyal aspirations of the petitioners, and hoping that the Government may devise some means of availing itself of the services thus placed at its disposal.

"The Calcutta Englishman states that a committee appointed by the Government of French India recommends the construction of a harbour, of docks, and of warehouses at Pondicherry, at a cost of 21,000,000*fr.* The Government is asked to guarantee 5½ per cent. interest on the outlay. This would absorb nearly the entire revenue of the colony. The committee, however, estimates that the trade of the port will so greatly increase as to cover not only the yearly interest, but also the working expenses.

"The prospect of the indigo crops are reported to be bad. The want of rain has interfered with the operations both in Bengal and Behar.

The following is from the Times correspondent with the Afghan Frontier Commission, dated Gulran, April 3:—

"The Russians, making a pretext of a change in the position of the Afghan outposts, attacked the Afghans at Penjdeh on the 30th of March, and drove them out.

"The Afghans fought stubbornly, but the day was wet and their muzzle-loaders were ineffective.

"Two companies defended one position till every man was killed.

"The Afghans retreated in perfect order to Meruchak, and no pursuit was made.

"The Sariks remained neutral, but plundered the Afghan camp.

"The Russian loss is said to have been great.

"The British officers remained till the Afghans had effected their retreat, and then joined General Lumsden's camp."

THE RAWUL PINDI CONFERENCE.

"RAWUL PINDI, April 11.

"This morning the Ameer, accompanied by a large staff of British officers, visited the fort and arsenal, where he remained for two hours. He was specially struck with the armoury and examined minutely the mountain screw guns, which he said could be manufactured at Cabul.

"In the afternoon the Viceroy, accompanied by the Duke of Connaught, paid a farewell visit to the Ameer. His Highness's manner was most cordial. He repeatedly gave expression to his feelings of gratitude and delight.

"The Ameer was grateful for the magnificent reception accorded him, and the friendly welcome and treatment which he had experienced at the hands of the Viceroy. He said that the remembrance of all that had passed would remain engraved on his heart, as he himself would ever remain the grateful and devoted friend of the British Government.

"Before the meeting broke up his Highness paid a well-merited compliment to Captain Talbot for the service rendered by him as interpreter.

"Later in the evening the Ameer inspected the battery of heavy siege guns and the mountain battery presented to him by the Viceroy."

"APRIL 12.

"At 9 A.M. this morning, with the same ceremonial as that which marked his arrival, including a Royal salute, the Ameer left for Peshawur, where he proposes remaining for four days. Shortly before his departure, a deputation from the Viceroy attended at his Highness's residence to present him with the Insignia of the Grand Cross of the Star of India, which he received with lively and undisguised satisfaction, and which he at once put on, over his uniform. His delight at this last and crowning act of courtesy and friendliness on the part of the British Government was so great that, while Mr. Mackenzie Wallace was addressing him on behalf of the Viceroy, he could not refrain from giving audible expression to his gratitude."

"CALCUTTA, APRIL 12.

"Nothing has transpired here regarding the result of the Rawul Pindi Conference, but it is generally considered to be a very satisfactory one."

"RAWUL PINDI, April 12.

"Over and over again to-day the Ameer repeated the expression of his sense of the magnificent hospitality of the Viceroy; declaring that the honours shown to him were far more than he expected, but that he would never forget all that had happened, and would remain for ever the faithful friend of the British Government.

"Again, on the railway platform, surrounded by British officers, he made them a short speech, bidding them all farewell, and wishing them and the whole British Army happiness and prosperity. His last act was to send a friendly message of thanks and goodwill to the Viceroy.

"The departure of the Ameer, thus pleased and satisfied with all that has been done, marks the close of one of the most important gatherings that has ever taken place in India, one which has accomplished all that could have been anticipated for it.

"With all its attendant pageants and imposing state ceremonial, it is acknowledged on every side to have been a brilliant and complete success. The Ameer has been received and treated by the Viceroy in the only way in which it was possible to receive him—as the thoroughly sincere and trusted friend of the British Government;—which, on repeated public occasions and in the face of the whole world, he has now declared himself to be.

"As to the sincerity and depth of our own good intentions towards himself and his country, he can now entertain no doubt; and the fear which is said to have haunted him for some time past that it was the intention of the British Government eventually to reduce him to the virtual position of a feudatory Prince must, in view of his treatment by Lord Dufferin and of the fact that the Duke of Connaught assisted at the ceremonies held to do him honour, have disappeared for ever.

"With respect to the details of the negotiations that have taken place between Lord Dufferin and the Ameer, nothing is or will probably for some time be known. It may, however, be presumed that the Ameer's demands were chiefly for the sinews of war, in the shape of money, arms, and guns; and it is not unreasonable that he should expect substantial assistance of this kind from us if Afghanistan is to be regarded as an outlying defence of the Indian Empire. Our demands would probably be limited to the acceptance by the Ameer of such guarantees as seem necessary to insure the effective utilization of our aid for its legitimate purpose.

"It is certain that for many intelligible reasons the Ameer has no desire to see our troops in Afghanistan, save in presence of an extreme emergency. His wish is, by opposing the Russian advance as far as may be with his own armies, to accentuate his position before the world as a powerful and independent Ruler.

"Regarding the wishes and intentions of the people of Afghanistan, a study of the Ameer's character renders it almost certain that while he lives the nation will obey his will. He has impressed all who have seen him as being a man of abnormal shrewdness and sagacity, and of indomitable strength of purpose. The key to his character may indeed be found in his extraordinary self-confidence. He stands literally alone, having no counsellors on whom he relies, or whom he consults. That in four years he should unaided have made secure his position in Cabul, and caused his name to be feared and his orders obeyed in the most distant parts of Afghanistan speaks of itself for the many sterling and kingly qualities which underlie his boastful and self-confident demeanour. The terror with which he is regarded by his subjects is extreme, but this is due more to their knowledge of his iron strength of purpose than to the remembrance of the many acts of severity which have marked the consolidation of his power, and which he himself justifies by the remark, that 'none but an Afghan can know or criticise the way to rule Afghans.'

"Among the agricultural classes of Afghanistan he is very popular, for he has protected them from the oppression of the nobles, and to the army he shows particular favour.

"The latest news from Afghanistan is that a Jihad is being preached in the mosques by the generality of the Mollahs, and that the ill-treatment of women in Central Asia by members of the Russian army is the subject of indignant comment.

"The Ameer received the intelligence of the Penjdeh disaster with comparative indifference, remarking that the loss of 500 men did not affect a kingdom, and that now that Afghanistan was allied with England there was nothing to fear.

"There is a belief prevalent that war will not break out. Should this be the case, it is certain that some disappointment will be manifested by those more loyal native chiefs and inhabitants of India who firmly believe that the present is England's opportunity, and that delay is fatal. Such feeling would be unavoidable, although much to be regretted. The more warlike party evidently thinks little of the heavy additional taxation which war would immediately necessitate.

"Owing to the prolonged stay of the Ameer, the Viceroy has had to abandon his intention of visiting Peshawur, as his Excellency wishes to join the other members of the Government now already assembled at Simla.

"The Viceroy leaves for the Attock Bridge to-morrow night. After inspecting that famous bridge the Viceregal party will go down by boats on the Indus to Kushalgarh, whence they will proceed to Lahore.

"The brilliant and unclouded success of this historical Durbur, conducted as it has been without a single hitch or contretemps from beginning to end, has raised his Excellency's reputation among the natives of India to the zenith. The confidence felt by all classes in his Excellency's conduct of affairs is practically unbounded, and to this feeling is mainly attributable the extraordinarily calm attitude of the Indian nation in the face of a grave and momentous crisis.

"The Nepaulese deputation leaves to-day with letters from the Viceroy, acknowledging in cordial terms the singularly generous offer of support received from the Nepaulese Government.

"The Duke and Duchess of Connaught leave to-night for Meerut."

"APRIL 13.

"The Ameer reached Peshawur yesterday evening. He inspected the famous bridge at Attock en route, going over the bridge on a trolley, which he preferred to a railway carriage.

"The Viceroy will leave to-night, reaching Attock early to-morrow. The Maharajah of Cashmere will arrive in Lahore on Wednesday. The Viceroy is to remain at Lahore from Wednesday to Friday, spending Sunday at Pinjore, and reaching Simla on Monday evening.

"Most of the troops have already left here. The remarkable absence of sickness among them, notwithstanding the trying weather, is chiefly owing to the perfect arrangements for the camps and the commissariat made by Colonel Parry and Major Nesbitt and the Punjab authorities. In recognition of these services the Lieutenant-Governor has issued a complimentary order."

COUNCIL DRAFTS FOR INDIA.—The tenders for Rs.50,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday last at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—in bills on Calcutta, Rs.6,38,700, average rate ls. 6.75d.; on Bombay, Rs.10,20,000, average rate ls. 6.75d., and on Madras, Rs.70,000, average rate ls. 6.76d.; in telegraphic transfers, on Calcutta, Rs.5,00,000, average rate ls. 6.781d.; and on Bombay, Rs.2,50,000, average rate ls. 6.781d.; or a total of Rs.24,78,700. Tenders for bills on all Presidencies at ls. 6½d. and above will receive in full; and for telegraphic transfers on Calcutta and Bombay at ls. 6.25-32d., about 50 per cent. Subsequently bills for half a lakh on Madras were sold at ls. 6.25-32d., and transfers for a lakh and a-half on Bombay at ls. 6.27-32d. per rupee. The drawings for next Wednesday are to be reduced to 35 lakhs. For the first week of the current financial year remittances for Rs.31,00,000 were sold, realising £243,639. On Friday the India Council sold five lakhs of telegraphic transfers at ls. 6.29-32d., besides bills for Rs.50,000 on Bombay at ls. 6.25-32d. per rupee. On Saturday the India Council sold five lakhs of bills on Calcutta at ls. 6.15-16d. per rupee. Five lakhs of telegraphic transfers at ls. 75-82d., and three at ls. 79-32d., were also allotted on Bombay; these latter caused no small amount of surprise, as the prices paid, when compared with those obtainable by the Council for some transfers on Friday, show the relatively large rise of ¼d. to ½d.

PROFESSOR ARMINIUS VAMBERY.—Professor Arminius Vambery, the celebrated Central Asian traveller and learned professor at the Buda-Pesth University, will visit England at the end of the present month for the purpose of delivering some lectures on the Central Asian question. One of these will be given before the Indian Section of the Society of Arts; but, as the exact day of Professor Vambery's arrival is not yet settled, the final arrangements of the subjects and dates of these lectures remain to be fixed.

On the invitation of the Italian Government an international conference is about to assemble at Rome for the purpose of discussing the precautions that should be taken in the event of an epidemic of cholera again occurring in Europe. Signor Mancini, the Italian Foreign Minister, has invited representatives of all the European Powers; and, as at present arranged, the conference will meet early in May. Lord Granville has appointed as the delegates, on behalf of England, Sir W. Guyer Hunter, K.C.M.G., well-known in connection with the cholera epidemics in Egypt, and formerly of the Bombay Medical Service, and Dr. R. T. Thorne, the assistant medical officer of the Local Government Board.

MR. LEWIS M'IVER, late of the Indian Civil Service, has been adopted as the Liberal candidate for the new Torquay division.

NOTICES OF MEETINGS, DIVIDENDS, &c.

ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION.—On Thursday last a meeting of the contributories was held at the City Terminus Hotel, in accordance with a requisition of shareholders. Mr. Thomas A. Welton, the official liquidator, presided, and, opening the proceedings, stated that he had convened the meeting in consequence of a requisition which he had received from thirty-four shareholders, holding 5,688 shares, seven of them holding 4,231 shares. The meeting had been called to consider in what way the shareholders of the Oriental Bank Corporation might benefit their own interests. A great many of them would be unaware that the corporation was interested in estates in Mauritius and Ceylon to the value of about £1,400,000 and £1,100,000 respectively in the two islands. This total of £2,500,000 included the amount due from the Ceylon Company. There were also other claims in the islands amounting to at least another £500,000. Thus they had properties represented by £3,000,000, the value of which, however, was greatly depreciated by the state of affairs in the islands. During the existence of the bank large advances had to be made for the cultivation of these estates, the position of which had, in fact, constituted his greatest anxiety and responsibility. He had avoided sacrificing the estates prematurely, and had kept matters going on with the view of obtaining the real value of the properties. He had provided the sums necessary for the cultivation of the estates, which he had personally had to take care of. A considerable effort would be required if the affairs were to be taken out of his hands, and there was very good reason why that should be done. No Court, whatever its desire to benefit the shareholders, would feel it right to go on indefinitely, cultivating estates and not realizing them; and in the present case sufficient time had already elapsed to make the Judge feel that some of the properties ought to be realized. As to the Ceylon estates, he felt easy, for the cultivation did not require any large sum, and the value of the crops exceeded the cultivation expenses. Such estates which he did not see his way to continue to carry on—practically for the benefit of the mortgagees—would now have to be sold, and the probability was that the price would be so low that it would be advantageous for an assets company, such as that which was contemplated, to bid for and buy them. It was very much on that account that he had agreed to hold that meeting. He had entertained the idea of forming two companies—one to work the Ceylon and the other to work the Mauritius estates—but he had arrived at the conclusion that the Ceylon matter had better stand over. He was, however, rather impeded by being informed by certain shareholders that there was a prospect of a company being started to take over some of the assets. This project would have solved the difficulty for him. If such a company as that now suggested were formed, he would be quite prepared to take a certain number of shares in it. He very much desired to see the shareholders earn something for themselves in reduction of the loss they had sustained, but he saw no chance of their getting any return on their shares by any other method than that now suggested. Mr. Edward F. Harrison then proposed, and Mr. James Wilson seconded, a resolution expressing the opinion of the meeting that a company should be formed for the purposes mentioned in the requisition. Mr. Macdonald referred to the draft prospectus which had been issued, and stated that the second class of shares (100,000 ordinary shares of £1 each) had been specially created in order to enable the old shareholders of the Oriental Bank Corporation to benefit to the utmost advantage. It was proposed that after the realization of the assets acquired, the preference shareholders should be entitled to repayment, together with a preferential and cumulative dividend of 7 per cent. per annum and a bonus of 10 per cent. out of the ultimate surplus. This meant that the £500,000 to be subscribed as preference shares should be paid first. It was proposed to issue to the official liquidator 50,000 of the ordinary shares, fully paid, the cash payment for the estates which it was proposed to purchase being £225,000. As to the 50,000 shares which it was proposed to issue to the shareholders of the Oriental Bank Corporation, it was believed that the object sought for might be attained by calling up simply 1s. a share. This contribution would entitle the holders of the ordinary shares to all the privileges mentioned in the prospectus in the ultimate surplus. It was provided that creditors might come into the proposed company, the prospectus stating that "the company's bankers had agreed to purchase approved claims on the official liquidator of the Oriental Bank Corporation at the rate of 85 per cent., free of all expense for stamps and charges, applying the proceeds in payment for the shares allotted. A discussion followed, in which several gentlemen took part; and, in answer to questions, the chairman stated that the prospectus at present bound no one. If the proposed company were not floated he would be very thankful if he could do as much as pay the creditors 20s. in the pound. The prospectus stated that he would be willing to entertain certain terms for the acquisition of some of the properties, but in the meantime he did not consider that the meeting or himself were bound to the sum stated. Whenever the company was formed, and made him a proposal, he would consider it, and recommend it to the Court if he could do so. If the company, when formed, chose to buy part or all of the estates in Mauritius, they would buy subject to such first mortgages as existed; but if they thought proper to buy them out complete, he would be very pleased. In answer to Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Macdonald stated that if the assets should, fortunately, realize 20s. in the pound, with interest to the creditors, the benefits arising from the 50,000 shares to be issued to the liquidator would be available for the shareholders of the Oriental Bank Corporation, whether or not they subscribed to the shares of the assets company. Unless, however, they subscribed, they would be excluded from any other benefits. The resolution was ultimately agreed to nem. con. On the motion of Major Cotton, a resolution was next passed appointing a committee of seven "to settle and issue the prospectus, the draft of which has already been prepared, with power to add to their number." A further resolution was subsequently passed, appointing Major-General Rigby, Major Cotton, and Messrs. E. F. Harrison, James Wilson, C. J. L. Nicholson, Alfred Wilson, and Charles Hemery as members of the committee. It was suggested that Mr. John Young (late chairman of the Oriental Bank Corporation) should become a member of the committee; but Mr. Young said he deemed it advisable not to consent to this, though he would be willing to render the committee any assistance he could. A vote of thanks was then passed to the chairman, and a similar compliment to

Mr. Macdonald for the services he had rendered closed the proceedings.

ROYAL COLONIAL INSTITUTE.—At a meeting to be held on Tuesday, the 14th inst., at the Westminster Palace Hotel, the Hon. Mr. Justice Pinsent, D.C.L., will read a paper on "Newfoundland—our Oldest Colony." The chair will be taken at 8 p.m. by the Right Hon. the Marquis of Lorne, K.T., G.C.M.G.

STRANGERS' HOME FOR ASIATICS, &c.—The annual meeting will be held at "The Home," West India Dock-road, Limehouse, on Wednesday, the 15th inst., at 3 p.m. Chair will be taken by Captain the Hon. Francis Maude, R.N.

SOCIETY OF ARTS (INDIAN SECTION).—On Friday next, the 17th inst., at 8 p.m., a paper will be read by Mr. Jehangier Dosabhooy Franjee, of the Bombay Uncovenanted Civil Service, on "The Parsis and the Trade of Western India," when the chair will be taken by Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.—An extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders whose names were, on the 17th of June last, on the register of proprietors of consolidated stock of the company, was held on Thursday last at the Guildhall Tavern. Mr. J. Farley Leith, Q.C., presided. In a special report of the directors reference was made to the circular issued by them on the 15th of January last, alluding to the delay which had occurred in issuing warrants for the payment of the final dividend, owing to a question which had arisen in India on the accounts of the fire insurance and river flotilla reserve fund. Despatches had since been received, and it appeared that an error involving the large amount of 58,002 rupees had occurred in making out the accounts in India, which were submitted to the general meeting last December. The chairman explained at length the differences which had arisen between the company and the Government, referred to in the report, and intimated that the result of the arrangement finally agreed on was to reduce the amount shown at the December meeting as available for dividend from £11,198 to £8,397, which was increased to £8,458 by a sum of £60, which had been mainly derived from interest. This amount would allow of the distribution of a dividend of 7s. 6d. per cent. on the consolidated stock, instead of 9s. 11-16d., as authorised by the resolution passed at the meeting in December. He concluded by submitting a motion amending the resolution to this effect. Major-General J. P. Beadle, R.E., seconded the motion, which was agreed to.

DELHI AND LONDON BANK (LIMITED).—The half-yearly ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of this bank has been held at the Branch Office, Bishopgate-street Within. Mr. D. H. Small, who presided, in moving the adoption of the report, said he need hardly inform them that the past half-year had not been so favourable to banking operations as they might desire. The accounts that had been submitted to them showed no diminution, rather a slight increase in the bank's operations during the second half of the past year, but from various causes there had not been a corresponding increase of profits. At the last half-yearly meeting they were able to declare a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent., and to set aside £3,000, while for the half-year ending December 31, 1884, although maintaining the same rate of dividend, he was sorry to say they were not able to put more than £1,000 to the doubtful debt account. However, considering the many adverse circumstances against which they had had to contend, the low rate of interest, and the falling off in the rate of exchange between this country and the East, he thought they would be satisfied with the accounts now before them. They would have to elect the two retiring directors, Major-General Clark and himself. They were first elected close on twenty years ago, when the head office of the bank was transferred from Delhi to London. Of Major-General Clark he might fairly say that he had attended well to his duty, and as for himself, as his co-directors elected him to be their chairman fifteen years ago, and he had occupied that position ever since, he considered that he had merited their confidence. Colonel the Hon. R. Anderson Murray seconded the motion, which was carried without discussion. The retiring directors were then re-elected, as were also the auditors, and the meeting closed with the customary vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

OBITUARY.

GENERAL JOHN EDMONDSTOUNE LANDERS, late Bengal Infantry, died on April 6, at Bryanston-street, Portman-square, aged eighty-two years. He entered the Army in 1820, became a lieutenant in 1823, captain in 1835, and major in 1846, in which year he commanded the Bhopal Contingent in an engagement with a party of insurgents. He obtained the rank of lieutenant-colonel in 1853, was promoted to colonel in 1854, major-general in 1865, lieutenant-general in 1872, and general in 1877.

DR. JOSEPH POPE died on April 6, at South-crescent, Bedford-square. Dr. Pope was formerly a staff-surgeon in the Royal Artillery, and served twice in India. For some time he had been lecturer to the National Health Association, and was well known as a contributor to sporting and social periodicals. He was brother to Mr. Samuel Pope, Q.C.

TRUE LEADERS.

✓ Whichever way the final vote on the Tenancy Bill may be given, the credit of the debate rests with the native members. Two men, comparatively unknown, come out of this great fight against a despotic perversion of the powers of the Government, with reputations which place them amongst the foremost of the native community. When the Maharajah of Durbhungah joined the Council, his youth was objected to, and his want of experience was pleaded as a disability. He has nobly redeemed the confidence placed in him, and has effectually asserted his claim to be a leader of the native community. He has shown great tact and judgment, and a great knowledge of a very intricate subject; and he has undoubtedly earned for himself the reputation and character of one of the ablest men the native community has yet given to the Council. That he has fought a losing fight only enhances the great ability he has displayed; and it is not too much to say that henceforth Englishmen will expect great things of the Maharajah of Durbhungah, and will regard him, on account of his intelligence, his great position, his mastery of English, and his pluck, as a man who must be reckoned with when any great public question comes to the front. The Maharajah has won his right to the leadership of the Behar community, and won it in a way which makes Englishmen, no less than natives, proud of him.

Another comparatively new man is Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerjee. The son of perhaps the wisest and ablest Zemindar in Lower Bengal, Baboo Peary Mohun has now, under the stress of a great question, established for himself a reputation for wisdom and practical statesmanship, for moderation and the very highest class of ability, equal at least to that enjoyed by the late Kristo Das Pal. The native community is to be congratulated upon having found such a representative,—a man who more than sustains the reputation of his family for ability, and who comes out of this prolonged discussion with a gathered respect for his character, attainments, and capacity, of which any man may be justly proud. The opportunity came to Baboo Peary Mohun, and he certainly has not been in any way unequal to the strain put upon him. He has shown himself a profound master of the land question without being a fanatic in the cause he was more especially considered to represent. He was a defender of the rights of zemindars; but his reputation would not to-day have stood so high if he had been nothing more. He has risen to the statesmanship of the question, and has shown powers which we are sure will mark him out to the Government as a man who must be regarded as in every way a worthy and a fitting successor to Kristo Das Pal. It is a satisfaction to us, as Anglo-Indians, to hear ungrudging testimony to the manner in which Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerjee has acquitted himself of the most responsible task which has fallen to a native of this country since the days of Maharajah Nabo Kissen. We can only hope that before the Maharajah of Durbhungah and Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerjee there is opening a long career of honour and usefulness,—honour to themselves, and usefulness to both India and England.—Indian Daily News.

IS INDIA TO BE GOVERNED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST REGARD TO PUBLIC OPINION?

The utter disregard of public opinion that is being shown by the Government of India in its determination to proceed with the Bengal Tenancy Bill has filled the public mind with alarm. If India is governed in other matters in future in such defiance of public opinion, we shall certainly have no reasons to congratulate ourselves upon the prospect before us. Lord Dufferin seems to be as firm as a rock. Some people say that he is as strong as Lord Dalhousie. Such may be the case. But in Lord Dalhousie's time India was quite different from what it is now, nor was public opinion as strong as it has since become. As regards native public opinion, it is now more enlightened and, therefore, more powerful than it ever was in times past. Such public opinion can no longer be neglected without serious detriment to the vital interests of the country. The Tenancy Bill will, we hear, be passed into law in a day or two, in spite of the strong opposition offered to it from all quarters. The feeling against it is universal; and thoughtful men are almost certain that the Bill, when it becomes law, will seriously imperil the peace and prosperity of Bengal. And yet the Government, both in this country and in England, is determined to see it passed into law. If public opinion, so singularly unanimous and so remarkably earnest, be contemptibly set aside, and legislation be conducted without any regard to it, then how can we hope for good government in this country? The way in which the Tenancy Bill is about to be passed into law shows the determination of a despotic rather than of a constitutional Government. We really see the danger in waiting for us on all sides in Bengal in connection with the Bill; and it is for this reason that we write in this strain. No possible legislation will so precipitate the utter ruin of these Provinces as this Tenancy Bill. But the Government has become perfectly deaf to the voice of reason. And what has alarmed the public most is that if the Government continues to treat public opinion with such supreme contempt on other important questions, too, the satisfactory administration of public affairs in this country will be next to an impossibility, and the disasters, certain to result from such a state of things, will be of a gravity we cannot at present conceive. The Bengal Tenancy Bill will add very much to the discontent of the people, and the discontent will, we are sure, grow more and more as the further legislation, to which the Tenancy Bill will necessarily lead, is undertaken and carried out. We have already had an instalment of such legislation in the Putwari Bill. Other Bills of a similar character will doubtless be sooner or later introduced into the local Legislative Councils.

It is said that vox populi is vox Dei. Never did vox populi manifest itself so unmistakably and so powerfully in India as in the case of the Tenancy Bill. The zemindars are no doubt interested parties, and whatever they may say will not carry much weight. But numerous other parties, who are perfectly disinterested, who have no personal concern in the Bill, but who see and are convinced of the real danger likely to result from the present legislation, oppose the Bill most stoutly. Surely their voice is entitled to great weight? But vox populi, which is vox Dei, is being most cruelly smothered. We are stricken dumb, and only look with mingled pity and alarm on the present action of the Government. Lord Dufferin may yet turn out an excellent Viceroy. We have no desire to judge him so early in the day. We must suspend our judgment regarding him till some later period of his administration. But we cannot refrain from saying that his proceedings in regard to the Tenancy Bill have taken the whole community by surprise. The surprise is the greater, because at this critical juncture in India every care should be taken to conciliate rather than to irritate public feeling, especially native public feeling. But public feeling in the present instance has been utterly scorned and contemned. If, then, we are to be governed with the iron hand of despotism, the Government must be prepared to face great discontent throughout the land. What differentiates the despotic rule of the Czar from the Queen's Government is that every dependency of the British Crown is governed, or supposed to be governed, on the principles of equity and justice, and with due regard to public opinion. But the Tenancy Bill is being passed through the Council as if we had been living not under the Queen's Government, but the autocratic rule of the Czar. We hope Lord Dufferin's views, as an Englishman, have not undergone a change by a long residence at the Czar's Court. We yet look hopefully to his Government, and trust that future events will set him right with the public, especially that portion of it to which we belong, and which we represent.

But to us the Tenancy Bill looks as a precursor of many evils, and Bengal must be prepared for the unhappy times that are coming. The Province has been most unhappy in its present Lieutenant-Governor, and it seems to us as if his administration were fraught with whatever was calculated to injure and degrade the population subject to his unhappy rule. His Honour has just shown an equal disregard of public opinion by persisting to proceed with the execution of the Kidderpore Dock scheme, in spite of the unanimous condemnation pronounced on it by all sections of the community. This dock scheme seems quite as bad a job as the Tenancy Bill. But the Bengal Government is determined to push on the work, whether it is wanted or not, whether ships can use it or not, whether the river can bring up any ships into it or not. Whether Calcutta or commerce profits by the docks or not, it is evident that some gain will accrue from the project. The scheme will, however, plunge the Port Trust into irretrievable debt, and will, we fear very much, make Calcutta so unhealthy as to lead to a serious depreciation in the value of house and landed property in the city. We are in danger on all sides, because our rulers will listen to nobody but themselves. We are really passing through most critical times.—Indian Mirror.

DEFENCES OF RANGOON.

Now that threatenings of war are constantly in our ears, one week with France, another week with Russia, the people of Rangoon are reasonably anxious to know what is being done to put the port in a state of defence. The short channel from the sea, the wealth and shipping, and the absence of British war vessels from the Bay of Bengal, all combine to make Rangoon a tempting prize for hostile cruisers. While England remains a great power, we need not fear that a hostile squadron or foreign ironclads will hover about the Rangoon river. But so long as the port is defenceless, a single daring gunboat could inflict enormous loss on Rangoon, and could deal a very serious blow to British power in the Indo-Chinese peninsula. We have, therefore, tried to ascertain what is now the real state of our harbour defences. The authorities decline to give precise details on such points as the number of their torpedoes, the places where torpedoes are to be laid, the arc of fire of the several guns in the battery, or the defences of the battery against land attack; for the publication of information on such points can do no good and may do harm. But such information as we have been able to obtain we now offer to our readers.

A year ago not only was Rangoon defenceless, but it would have taken several weeks to set up any defences at all; and despite all that had been said no scheme for the defence of the port had been sanctioned. All authorities are agreed that if we had plenty of money and plenty of troops the best protection for Rangoon would be a heavily-armed fort at Chokey Point, whence the narrow channel would be commanded by heavy guns and protected by torpedoes. But even if money were given for a fort at Chokey Point the garrison of Rangoon is too small to man, relieve and support an outwork of that kind. So at present we have to be satisfied with torpedo defences for the river and a small battery at Monkey Point. Neither of these defences is as yet complete; but money and efforts are now being devoted to getting them ready as soon as possible. The first line of defences will be the torpedoes. A certain number of torpedo fields have been chosen between the Bassein creek and Monkey Point channel. The full number of torpedoes proposed by the Superintendent of Submarine Defences are now in Rangoon. This officer, Captain Carter, R.E., was for several years in charge of the torpedo defences at Halifax. He is now engaged in arranging the torpedo defences for the four harbours of Calcutta, Bombay, Rangoon, and Kurrachee. He came here in May and November, 1884; and has organised, under Lieutenant Ellis, R.E., a permanent torpedo staff, consisting of nine European Sapper Artificers, and thirty Madras Sappers. Captain Carter is now in Rangoon again inspecting and directing his staff. Among the European Sappers are two experienced divers. The torpedoes are great iron cases, which are anchored in our river on the torpedo fields. Each torpedo is to be kept packed with not less than 500lbs. of gun-cotton, equal in explosive force to about 1,250lbs. of gunpowder. The torpedoes, when kept charged, can all be placed on the several torpedo fields at two or three days' notice. They are to be fired by electric batteries on shore; and in order to prevent cruisers running over the torpedo field at night electric lights have been provided with which to search the torpedo field. The torpedo staff are being constantly practised in laying down the torpedoes, in testing the wire connections and the works inside torpedo cases, and in removing or shifting the gear. A large store of gun-cotton is already at Rangoon, and the packing of all the torpedoes will be done directly the laboratory and other buildings near Monkey Point are finished. The designs and plans for these buildings, at a total cost of nearly Rs. 1,40,000, have been sanctioned. As yet very little money has been granted for them, but the buildings are begun. A special R.E. officer has been given to help the Executive Engineer, Mr. Ring, in the works at Monkey Point. A defensive post, which can be armed with light field-guns, has to be built at some point down the river. From this post the electric batteries will be worked on the lower torpedo fields, and light guns will protect the fields against hostile boats that may try to lift the torpedoes or cut the wires. Two old launches belonging to the torpedo party have been lost, and the men are now working with borrowed launches. A new launch from White of Cowes, with a speed of fourteen knots, and a rudder amidships, is expected out in December next. By the end of 1885 all the torpedo arrangements ought to be complete, except, perhaps, the defensive post down the river. At the present moment a very fair system of torpedo defences could be put down at ten days' notice. Torpedo defences have yet to be tested in actual warfare and in a strong tide; but the Chinese torpedoes seem on more than one occasion to have kept the French Admiral off places he wished to enter; and it is the opinion of some experts that no hostile squadron, and probably no cruiser, would attempt a dash on Rangoon if the river were known to be protected by torpedo fields properly laid and managed.

After the torpedo or sub-marine defences comes the Monkey Point Battery, which constitutes our second line. A complete plan has been worked out for remaking and arming this battery. It is to mount five 9-inch 12-ton guns. These guns, in the hands of skilful gunners, like men of the Marine Artillery, can make splendid practice up to 2,000 yards. They pierce eight to nine inches of armour plate, with six inches of teak backing. The five guns, with their carriages, are here, and the guns are down at Monkey Point. They are not yet mounted, because the emplacements are only now being built. The whole cost of the renewed battery, exclusive of guns, &c., is two and a quarter lakhs. A sum of Rs. 68,000 has already been sanctioned for building the five emplacements. Delay has been caused by the treacherous nature of the soil, which is little else than liquid mud a few feet below the surface. Timber piling, fifteen feet deep, has been let into the ground all round the base of each emplacement. On the ground so formed a concrete pillow seven feet high is to be built for each gun, which will be worked en barbette. At present one pillar has been partly built, and the five guns are to be laid upon the top of the pillar. They are to stay there a week to see if the pillar sinks. If it does not sink, then the five emplacements will be pushed on as rapidly as possible, and the five guns ought to be mounted by June or July next. It is absolutely necessary to make sure about the foundations of these emplacements; for if the concrete blocks sink unequally the guns will not work on the platforms. The five guns can fire 4,000 yards down the river as well as up the Pegu river, across the Poozoondoung river, and up the harbour as far as the Town Church. But they cannot all be in position for three or four months to come. Possibly two guns could be put into some kind of working position at ten days' notice. Even when the guns are mounted, the magazines, the guard-rooms, the curtain wall, all have to be built; the earthwork has to be finished and riveted with a thick masonry wall; and other defensive works have to be added to make the battery secure from a determined attack. Even if all the necessary money were given, the battery could hardly be fully complete until this time next year, if then. But, when once the five guns, or even three of them, are mounted, the battery could be put into some kind of fighting order by temporary expedients at two or three weeks' notice. The subsidiary defences for the battery are designed for machine guns and rifle fire. But as yet there are no machine guns in Burma except those mounted on H.M.'s vessels Dragon and Irrawaddy.

Such is the account we have been able to glean, and we believe the sketch to be true so far as it goes. We cannot say it is satisfactory; for the Government ought to have finished the Monkey Point battery and given Rangoon some moderate means of defence years ago. But it seems that something is now being done to make up for past procrastination. We hope, we cannot after past experience say we trust, that money will be given, and that work will be pushed on until the torpedo buildings, including the place of arms down the river, are complete; until the torpedo staff, with their steamtug and flat are in thoroughly efficient working order; until the five guns are mounted; until all the magazines and subsidiary buildings at the battery are finished; until all the defensive works at Monkey Point are done; and until the necessary machine guns are furnished. We urge the General, the Chief Commissioner, the Chamber of Commerce, the merchants, and the public of Rangoon not to spare importunity, and to employ every kind of pressure until the defences and arrangements we have described are actually finished and have been found, after due experiment, in thorough working order.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.

The April number of this magazine contains some valuable and opportune articles on the Russo-Afghan question. There is one by Professor Vambéry, whose great learning and practical experience will add much weight to the arguments brought forward to show that the whole movement of the Russians at the present moment is nothing else than a badly-concealed attempt against Herat itself. The subject is treated by an "Old Punjabee" from the other or Indian side, giving a clear, concise account of our action of late years with Afghanistan, and proving from the words of the actors that the rupture was caused by the shortsighted and hesitating policy of Government. Of all Russian generals Skobelev attained the greatest fame of late, yet few people could say precisely what were his achievements, or the mode in which he acquired such power over men; the sketch of his career as a soldier which is given in this number will make that clear. The famous surprise of Frederic the Great's army at Maxen forms the subject of the contribution by Colonel Malleon. An article on "Aids to Recruiting," by Captain Williams of the Army Reserve, advocates not only the civil employment of soldiers after discharge, but also that efforts should be made in that direction during the period that soldiers are liable to service. The "Tale of Military Life" is continued in pleasant and interesting fashion.

THOUGHTS AND REMEMBRANCE.*

We have read with some pleasure the small volume of verses by Miss Leith. The tone is true and healthy, the language graceful and direct. Some of the shorter pieces, if set to music, would, we think, form a pleasant contrast to much that is sung nowadays. Among those which appear to us especially suited to this treatment we may mention "Marguerite," a simple tale, prettily told in the narrow limits of three short stanzas. Of the more serious pieces, Miss Leith's version of "Die Wacht am Rhein," and the lines on Gordon, seem to deserve special commendation. Of these latter, it is indeed no mean praise to say, that though evidently written before the death of him for whom the nation is now mourning, there is not a line or a thought which strikes us as incongruous or out of place. We must not forget to mention the paper, print, and binding, in the choice of which care and good taste have been exercised with a most happy result.

A LARGE MAP OF EGYPT AND THE SUDAN, printed in colours will, we hear, be issued with Part I of "Egypt: Descriptive, Historical, and Picturesque," to be published by Messrs. Cassell and Company on the 27th inst. This Map has been constructed by Mr. F. Weller, F.R.G.S., from the latest authorities, including the Admiralty and War Office Charts and Maps, and also from private information, special attention being given to the districts which are at present the scene of British military operations.

MESSRS. CASSELL AND COMPANY will shortly commence the issue in monthly parts of "Picturesque Canada," a new fine-art work, uniform with "Picturesque Europe" and "Picturesque America." "Picturesque Canada" is edited by Dr. Grant, Principal of Queen's University, Kingston, Canada, and will contain about six hundred illustrations by leading artists, executed under the supervision of Mr. L. R. O'Brien, President of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts.—The Academy.

An issue, in sixpenny parts, will be shortly published by Messrs. Cassell and Company, of "The Illustrated Book of Pigeons," by R. Fulton, with fifty coloured plates, specially executed for the work.

Correspondence.

SANCTIONED.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—What is the meaning of the word sanctioned in the present day? Does it mean that the Government clerks do not wish to be bothered any more, and that they therefore countenance measures which they are obliged to confess are of paramount importance, but about which they wish never to hear anything more?

What follows an official sanction given in a perfunctory manner? Nothing! It is not considered obligatory to perform a sanctioned work—the India Office does not see the necessity of preserving India unless the English public forces them to do so.

Ten months have elapsed since the India Office declared that it had long since sanctioned the construction of a railway from Jubulpoor to Nagpoor, and yet up to the present day not one sod of that railway has, I believe, been turned up, not one rupee has been expended in its construction.

And, if we have a war with Russia, Russian agents can in one hour dis sever North India from South India! Between Bhosawul and Jubulpoor there are a dozen places where the railway can be destroyed with ease.

As long as the India Office continues to declare that the projected military line from Jubulpoor to Nagpoor has been sanctioned, so long is it guilty of negligence in pooh-poohing the idea that time need be considered. When a terrible calamity shall have befallen us, the British nation will not be satisfied with the declaration that measures for preventing it were sanctioned long, long ago.

Government has promised that the strong opinion which they have expressed upon the strategic advantages of the Jubulpoor-Nagpoor railroad will be carefully considered; but the truth is that the India Office does not attempt any public work for military reasons—that Office has not the sense to grasp the fact that military considerations should come before all others in India.—Your obedient servant,
T.
April 11th.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

It is probable that Colonel H. Wood, commanding the Rifle Brigade, who had a nasty fall from his horse the other day, will be obliged to go home. Lieut.-Colonel J. S. H. Algar, commanding the King's Royal Rifle Corps, will command the Second Brigade, Second Division, at the Rawal Pindi Camp in place of Colonel Wood.

It has been already announced that leave in the native army has been stopped. It is now understood that, as was half anticipated, all military furlough and leave has been cancelled. This order applies even in cases of leave to the hills.

COLONEL LOCKHART, Deputy Quartermaster-General, Intelligence Branch, will succeed to the command of the 24th P.I., when Colonel Norman vacates on the 25th April next. Major Wemyss and Captain Money Simmons will be promoted in the regiment to be second-in-command and wing commander, respectively, vice Trotter, retired.

In response to the request of the Bombay Government the Madras authorities have detailed Major W. H. M. Franklyn, Lieutenant W. C. H. Mackintosh and Lieutenant N. S. Swanson for service as commissariat officers in Sind and the Bolan Pass.

Among the early results of the present military awakening will, no doubt, writes a contemporary, be the addition of 200 men to the strength of each Indian infantry regiment and of another squadron to each regiment of cavalry—a proposal to the effect, as it lately announced, having already been sent home. This would mean an increase to the army of fully 25,300 men.

The Pioneer says:—We may expect to see an immediate addition of from 12,000 to 15,000 European troops from England to the garrison in India, in the form of drafts, to increase the establishment of the regiments already composing it. There will probably be an increase of four or five battalions also. This number of regiments could be easily made available by embodying some more battalions of Militia for home service, thus setting free the regulars for foreign service. As a pendant to the above measure, the Indian establishment of Field Batteries will probably be restored to that in force before the reductions of 1882. These reductions, it will be remembered, were made in accordance with the recommendations of the Army Reorganization Commission. The reduction amounted to eleven batteries, if we mistake not.

THE increase of 200 men per battalion which has been sanctioned in the case of the five Goorkha and three Assam regiments now borne on the strength of the Indian army will, if possible, says the Pioneer, be made during the present recruiting season, which is just commencing, so far as Nepal is concerned. The idea is, we believe, to add twenty-five men to each of the eight companies which now go to form a regiment. The company would then be 125 strong, while the total of natives of all ranks in each regiment would rise to 1,112, the present strength being 912. Multiplying this out, and allowing for gaps in the ranks, we may say broadly that we shall in future have 8,800 Goorkhas under arms, soldiers equal to any work, and capable of holding their own against any enemy they are likely to be called upon to meet. What General Officer in India would not be proud to command a Goorkha Division 5,000 strong, such as could be put into the field in case of an emergency? As a special case, we should like to see at least two more British officers added to each of the eight regiments, for a company over 100 strong needs skilful handling, both on the parade-ground and in the field.

UNDER present circumstances the battalions for return to England during the next trooping season in the usual order of relief must not make too sure of their destination. One of them, the Oxford Light Infantry, the old 43rd, that landed at Bombay on November 1, 1872, has been ordered to Quetta from Bangalore; so that should it return home next season it has a good deal of travelling before it. This battalion has not been on active service since New Zealand, 1864-66, prior to which it served out here during the Mutiny. The battalion first for home is the 1st Durhams (68th), who arrived in India in March, 1872, and are now at Allahabad; whilst the last on the roll is the 1st South Lancashire Regiment at Aden, from which place, should relief be available from India, it will in all probability, be sent to Suakim or to Egypt, especially if the Boundary difficulty be tided over, to spend a year before reaching England. Only one of the three regiments of the relief of 1884-85 has at present reached its destination, the 1st Essex (44th) from Aden; the other two, the 1st Royal Irish (18th), now at Korti, and the 2nd East Surreys (70th), at Suakim.

ONE inevitable outcome of the arrangements for the military demonstration in Beluchistan, the Pioneer urges, must be the transfer of Quetta from the Bombay to the Supreme Government. "At present it owns divided allegiance, the garrison being subject to the Commander-in-Chief as regards its movements, and to the Commander-in-Chief at Bombay in questions of discipline. And although General Hardinge has always endeavoured to counteract the anomalies of this arrangement in a reasonable and accommodating spirit, the difficulties of the position will constantly assert themselves. But the reform, we prophesy, will go much further than Quetta. Lord Ripon, to do him justice, fought the case against the presidential army system well, and when he was beaten was wont to declare that the first war would be fatal to it. For ourselves, we believe that the mere preparations for a possible war will be fatal to it, so glaring, so monstrous, so injurious are the obstacles it raises to effective military administration.

BENGAL, UPPER INDIA, &c.

At the prospect of war in Central Asia Sikh recruits are offering in large numbers.

In view of the critical condition of affairs all military furlough has been cancelled. This order applies even in the case of leave to the hills.

An increase of 200 men per battalion has been sanctioned in the case of the five Goorkha and the three Assam regiments now borne on the strength of the Indian army.

MR. JUSTICE NORRIS, of the Calcutta High Court, has filed a suit against the Secretary of State, to recover the difference between the late pay of a High Court Judge and the reduced pay which he at present receives.

THE Nanchandi Fair was opened on the 16th ult. by the Duke of Connaught, and promises to be a great success. An immense concourse of people have assembled. Cattle and horses and various wares have been brought to the fair in great numbers.

THE Government of India have declined to give the Calcutta Port Trust any further financial help for the present in prosecuting the Kidderpore Docks scheme, and there is no prospect of the Trust authorities obtaining it in the open market.

SANCTION has been given by the Government of India to the formation of a Volunteer Reserve, consisting of Europeans, Eurasians and Native Christians who do not belong to the existing Volunteer Corps. It is expected that if properly supported the Reserve will add from 70,000 to 80,000 men to the military strength of the country.

THE CENTRAL NATIONAL MAHOMEDAN ASSOCIATION.—We learn that his Excellency Nawab Salar Jung, during his stay at Calcutta, gave a donation of Rs. 1,200 to the funds of this association, and promised a permanent subscription of Rs. 100 a month to enable it to further the education and moral interests of the Mahomedan community.—Statesman.

THE Englishman understands that the Government of Bengal has decided to appoint a Commission, composed of Mr. Beames, the Commissioner of Burdwan, and Mr. P. Nolan, Magistrate of Shahabad, to inquire into the condition of the amlah and other ministerial employes in the Courts throughout Bengal.

At the last meeting of the Calcutta branch of the Royal Asiatic Society the Hon. J. Gibbs exhibited a hundred gold-mohur piece of the Emperor Aurungzebe, sent for that purpose by his Highness the Maharajah Scindia. The coin was formerly in the possession of a banker at Benares, who presented it to the Maharajah.

SURGEON L. A. WADDELL, Resident Physician, Medical College Hospital, Calcutta, is appointed to be Superintendent of Vaccination, Ranchee Circle, vice Surgeon-Major J. F. P. McConnell, but will continue to officiate as Professor of Chemistry, Medical College, Calcutta, and Chemical Examiner to Government, during the absence, on leave, of Surgeon C. J. H. Warden, or until further orders.

COLONEL FERGUS GRAHAM, Commandant of the Calcutta Volunteers, will carry on the duties of Military Secretary to the Viceroy during Lord William Beresford's absence on leave.

It has been decided to abolish the local rank of Surgeon-General conferred on the administrative medical officers of Bengal, the North-West Provinces, and the Punjab, and to alter their designation to inspector-generals of civil hospitals.

WHEN Mr. H. J. S. Cotton takes his leave, Mr. Philip Nolan will officiate as Secretary to the Board of Revenue, Bengal, Mr. C. A. Samuells, Acting Collector of Faridpore, replacing him as Junior Secretary thereto, and Mr. N. H. Barrow, now at Balasore, probably taking Mr. Samuells' place.

If any incentive is needed to make the Native Chiefs arrive punctually at Pindi Camp, it may be forthcoming in the announcement that unless they adhere strictly to the time-table laid down for their special trains they will be liable to miss their salutes. So much powder has to be burnt that it has apparently been found necessary to have a sort of time-table for the guns as well as for the trains; the latter are bound to arrive sooner or later, but it does not follow that the saluting battery will turn out at casual hours.

MOFUSSIL NOTES.

(From the Indian Planters' Gazette)

Our old friend Captain Kunhardt, R.E., is off to the wars, having been ordered to embark for Suakim.

MOZUFFERPORE will be almost entirely deserted by the fair sex during the coming hot season. At present only four ladies are expected to form the coterie of this popular station.

It is proposed to appoint judges at Durbungah and Motihari. The more the merrier, particularly if the new judges are formed on the model of the popular one of Mozufferpore.

WE regret sincerely to hear that H.H. the Maharajah of Burdwan has had a relapse, but trust that under the skilful treatment of Drs. Purves and McConnell this most genial of Indian noblemen will soon be himself again.

HONOUR is always accorded by the Government to whom it may be due, and consequently H.H. the Maharajah of Durbungah has been specially invited by the Viceroy to swell his retinue of barons at the coming Rawul Pindi Durbar. Business alone prevents Mr. Bertie Short's acceptance of a similar courteous invitation.

THE Durbungah hunt in the Purneah Kosi *dear*as, for which preparations have been going on for the last month, and to which a large party from Government House were to have come, seems likely to be abandoned, owing to the Afghan complications. The jungles have been well burnt, and good sport could have been obtained.

MR. STANLEY LLEWELLYN, the energetic District Honorary Secretary (Mozufferpore) of the Behar Indigo Planters' Association, will hold a meeting at the Mozufferpore Club on the 24th inst. at 8 A.M. to discuss the proposed Putwari Bill.

It will probably seem strange to the many smokers of Burmah to be told that there are now good reasons to hope that the cultivation of tobacco is beginning to be popular and to take root in the province of Burmah. Such, however, is the case, for the weed we consume is exported from Bengal and Behar to Burmah in leaf and returned thence manufactured into Burmah cigars.

MANY of our readers will doubtless remember dear old Jack Forbes, erst of the Pundoul Concern, in Durbungah, where he so often dispensed unstinted hospitality. He has now started at 3, Hastings-street, Calcutta, as a Civil and Mechanical Engineer, Contractor and General Agent for Indigo and Tea Garden Stores, and will, we have no doubt, receive ample support from all his old friends.

INDIGO sowings are now almost completed everywhere throughout Behar, but planters are still anxious, as the weather generally is far from settled, clouds perpetually appearing, and in some parts of the district light showers have fallen, which have necessitated re-sowings and extra expenditure of seed. The young crop is everywhere coming up satisfactorily, though the quality of the seed supplied by certain dealers has been complained of.

MADRAS.

MESSRS. WEIR AND COMPANY, Madras, have received the contract for the Guntur extension of the Bellary Kistna State Railway, fifty-one miles. Work will be commenced on the 15th of April.

A MEETING of editors of vernacular papers was held in Madras on Saturday, the 21st ult., for the purpose of impressing upon brother editors in the Mofussil the necessity of moderation in their criticisms of Government measures.

THE question as to whether Mysore shall pay the enhanced subsidy according to the terms of the Rendition or not, is, says a local paper, as far from being settled as ever. "We believe so far that Lord Dufferin has promised to give the matter his best consideration, and this reply has been communicated to the Maharajah by the British Resident."

MR. D. S. WHITE'S INTERVIEW WITH THE VICEROY.—The Calcutta correspondent of the Madras Times telegraphs:—Mr. D. S. White had an interview on the 21st ult. with the Viceroy. The result of the interview was very satisfactory. The Viceroy was much pleased in the Eurasians and domiciled Europeans. His Excellency inquired about the Volunteers and the capability of Eurasians for military service, and regarding the specialities of the Eurasians. Mr. White has met with a good reception everywhere.

A LEOPARD KILLED BY A LOCOMOTIVE.—A leopard of unusual size made its appearance last Friday (March 20th) at Vikravandi (S.I.R.), attacking a gang of workmen employed on the line and badly mauling two of them. Mr. Lloyd, the engineer of the division, and two shikaries turned out, and eventually succeeded in bagging him. The brute showed most determined fight, charging and mauling one of the shikaries. Mr. Lloyd himself had a narrow escape, the police-musket he had missing fire. Fortunately, a light engine coming up, Mr. Lloyd availed of it, and from this novel "machan" gave "spots" his quietus; not, however, before he had twice charged the engine, and on one occasion actually succeeded in getting on to the foot-plates, but the engine being on the move threw him off. He measured from tip to tip six feet eight inches.—Times.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT IN MADRAS.—In a letter to the local papers Mr. J. H. Garstin, C.S.I., member of the Madras Revenue Board, appeals to all European and Eurasian residents to enrol themselves as volunteers. If they can spare the time for drill they should join the men of the present corps of volunteers; otherwise they should send in their names to him as willing to join a corps of volunteer riflemen, and he will ask Government to make arrangements. The Madras Mail says General Roberts favours the formation of a corps of this description, and it receives support from the local press. Thirty Eurasian recruits in one section of Madras have just joined the Madras Volunteer Guards, and many are anxious to form another battery of artillery volunteers. Efforts are being made at the instance of Captain Leonard, of the Bangalore Rifle Volunteers, who was chiefly instrumental in organising that corps, to organise a Battery of Volunteer Artillery of eighty men. Forty have already enrolled themselves, and a public meeting will shortly be called to consider the subject. Mr. Lyall, the British Resident, and General Rowlands, are taking a keen interest in the movement, and promising their hearty support.

BOMBAY.

At a meeting of the Bombay Municipal Corporation on Wednesday, the 25th ult., it was resolved to present an address to Lord Reay on his landing in Pombay.

COLONEL A. G. F. Hogg has been appointed Political Resident at Aden, in succession to Brigadier-General J. Blair, V.C.

THE Hon. Sir Auckland Colvin, K.C.M.G., arrived at Bombay on the 23rd ult., from Calcutta. During his stay in Bombay Sir Auckland will be the guest of Mr. Justice Scott.

THE following officials have been re-appointed members of the Bombay Port Trust:—Messrs. J. H. Grant, G. F. M. Grant, E. C. K. Ollivant, and Captain J. Hext, R.N.

It is officially notified that Chandra Kuverba, widow of the late Rajah Vajesingji, is exempted from the jurisdiction of the Civil and Criminal Courts, and is made amenable to the agent for H.E. the Governor of Bombay at Surat.

At a meeting of the Bombay Mill Owners' Association held on Thursday, the 26th ult., it was resolved to close the mills in the city for one day in seven, exclusive of holidays, from the 1st April to the 31st December next. The measure has been undertaken to check production in consequence of the bad state of trade.

THE Hon. Sir Stuart Colvin Bayley, K.C.S.I., arrived in Bombay on the 22nd ult. from Hyderabad by the Raichore mail train, and alighted at the Byculla railway station. During Sir Stuart's short stay here he will be the guest of the Hon. M. Melvill.

HIS HIGHNESS THE MAHARAJAH HOLKAR left Mhow for Allahabad on Friday, March 20th, to visit his Excellency Lord Dufferin, and to bathe in the Ganges on the occasion of the lunar eclipse. He is a little better. Lord Radstock was introduced to the Maharajah on the railway station, and was delighted with his Highness's conversation.

ON Sunday, the 22nd ult., his Excellency the Governor was presented with an address by the inhabitants of Parell; on Wednesday he received a farewell address from a large and representative deputation of the citizens of Bombay; on Wednesday evening he attended a farewell entertainment given by the Hon. Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Bart.; on Thursday he received an address from the Kattywar Chiefs; and, lastly, he was entertained at a banquet by the members of the Byculla Club the same evening.

ARRIVAL OF THE RAJ SAHEB OF DHIRANGUDRA.—On Saturday, March 21st his Highness Sir Munsingjee, K.C.S.I., the Raj Saheb of Dhrangadhra, accompanied by fifty armed followers, arrived in Bombay by the Ahmedabad mail train and alighted at the Grant-road railway station. A Government deputation, consisting of Mr. C. W. G. Macpherson, C.S., the Under-Secretary to Government, and Mr. Shunker Pandurang Pundit, the Oriental Translator to Government, were present at the station to receive the Raj Saheb. A detachment of the Poona Horse, under the command of a native officer, paraded in the compound of the station and escorted his Highness to his residence in Warden-road, Malabar Hill, where he is residing at present. A salute of eleven guns were fired in honour of his arrival.

BURMA.

MR. AGNEW, Recorder of Rangoon, leaves next month to officiate at the High Court, Calcutta. It is rumoured that Mr. MacEwen, now on furlough in England, succeeds him, he having been previously appointed Additional Recorder.

MR. LINGHAM, the first judge of the Court of Small Causes, resumed charge of his office from Mr. Owen on the 12th ult.

ON March 10 a fire broke out at Maulmain, in the Mopoon quarter, amongst some coolie barracks. There was no means of obtaining water, and before the conflagration was subdued one whole block 300 feet by 200 feet was destroyed. The bazaar had a narrow escape.

THE I.G.S. Enterprise left Rangoon on the 15th ult., with quite a large party on board, including Major-General and Miss Buck, Colonel Rowlandson, Major Wood, Captain and Mrs. Donald, &c. The General goes to Port Blair on inspection duty and will return by the A.S.N. Company's steamer. After dropping her passengers at Port Blair, the Enterprise will proceed on her usual trip round the Lighthouses.

BEGINNING with the 15th April next a "Training Depot for Police" is to be established at Pegu, where thirty Burmans and Karens will receive instruction in the duties pertaining to a police officer. For a start ten youths are to be selected from each of the Rangoon Town, Hanthawaddy and Pegu districts, and it is laid down as a condition that the candidates so selected must possess a thorough knowledge of reading and writing the Burmese language.

THE Port Commissioners of Rangoon have applied to the Government for permission to raise a loan of Rs. 7,50,000 to carry out several important improvements in the port during the next three years. These consist of the reclamation and drainage of the land between Sule Pagoda wharf and the bazaar, the building of a sea wall, the filling in of the excavation, draining, erecting godowns, building jetties, and making roads at the Lamma-daw reclamation. Jetties are also to be erected at Kemendine, while the landing ground at Broking-street wharf and Sule Pagoda wharf are to be covered over, and a buoy vessel is to be purchased.

SERIOUS AFFRAY AT TOUNGOO.—A correspondent writes to the Rangoon Gazette:—"A very serious affray took place on Friday afternoon last at the 'Feast of the Seven Pagodas,' where liquor was allowed to be retailed and in which some sepoys of the Native Regiment fared very badly indeed; there was stabbing and breaking of heads. The people must have been terribly scared, for they were seen rushing to town in large numbers, breathless and terrified. There were several officers and clerks at the feast, and so eager was one unfortunate clerk belonging to the Treasury to get away that he was pitched from his pony several times on his way home. I think that the sale of liquors at such places should not be permitted, and that a body of police, in charge of a European inspector, should be put on duty on such occasions. Situated, as we are, on the borders of an enemy's country, what reliance can be placed on a Burmese inspector or the native police? Toungoo should have a European inspector."

Miscellaneous.

CAPTAIN BASIL SPRAGGE, of the South Yorkshire Regiment, who acted as superintendent of Army Signalling in the last Afghan war, being twice mentioned in Despatches, has been selected to act as deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General of the Bengal Army, vice Major Pearson, on field service.

REFERRING to the new road from Kusbahgar to Bannu, and thence to Dera Ismail Khan, a correspondent at Kohat, writing on the 13th, says:—"Colonel Limond, R.E., and his camp have passed through here, and are now at Bannu. Two extra officers of the P.W.D. have also arrived here, for work on the road. No material has as yet been collected, and probably will not be till the commencement of the new financial year."

UNDER the instructions of the Government of India, a conference on caste is assembling at Lahore. The object is to consult as to the possibility of a uniform treatment of castes at the next census. The officers appointed to confer are Mr. Ibbetson, C.S., Director of Public Instruction, Punjab, Mr. John Nesfield, Inspector of Schools, Lucknow—a well-known authority on the subject—and Mr. H. Risley, C.S., of the Bengal Secretariat.

THE Government of India have declined to give the Calcutta Port Trust any further financial help for the present in prosecuting the Kidderpore Docks scheme, and there is no prospect of the Trust authorities obtaining it in the open market. So the opposition may take courage and return to the attack. But there is another obstacle in the way. The objection raised by many of the doctors to the miasma which the extensive excavating would let loose, and the south wind of this season blow across Calcutta, has been referred to the Sanitary Commissioner by the Lieutenant-Governor, and by him pronounced a valid one. So a commission is to be assembled to inquire into and report on the subject.

A VERY handsome clock, with a set of chimes, has been sent to Abbottabad by General Sir A. Becher, who wishes it to be set up in the district court-house as a memorial of his late brother, General John Becher, C.B., R.E., who was Deputy Commissioner of the Hazara District from October 1853 to April 1859, and whose name is still affectionately remembered in the district.

MOULVI SAMIULLA KHAN, C.M.G., Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, will be appointed Civil Judge at Rai Bareilly in the vacancy caused by the Hon. Syed Mahmud taking furlough on being relieved by Mr. Tyrrell. The appointment will not, however, take effect until towards the end of April. The Moulvi, it will be remembered, was sent to Egypt on special duty last year, and rendered valuable assistance to Lord Northbrook in his important financial mission.

ON the whole it may be said that the Arms Act is worked satisfactorily in the Assam Valley District, for, according to the latest report there were 3,416 gun licenses taken out during the year, whilst 5,180lbs. of gunpowder were imported, equal to 1,65lbs. per gun, and 4,880lbs., or 1,38lbs. per gun, were sold. The limit under the Arms Act for each gun is 1½lbs., and this quantity, it appears, was exceeded in Dhuri, Sibsagar, and Lakhimpore, but the returns given do not include the quantity sold to persons exempted from taking out licenses under the Act. The Chief Commissioner, however, suggests that it would be as well if they were from time to time to examine the registers kept by the licensed vendors, to see if any gun licensee has taken out an extra quantity of powder, and make inquiries as to what he has done with it.

MRS. LOPEZ has presented a petition to the Calcutta High Court in which she applied for costs to conduct her case before a full bench. The case which relates to the legality of marriage with a deceased wife's sister is considered so important that it is desirable that it should be heard before a full bench of seven judges. The court would help the petitioner if it could, but the Chief Justice observed that she did not distinctly state that she had no funds. The petitioner was at liberty to make a fresh application, stating this fact distinctly, when the court would take the matter into consideration.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 1885.

THE CRISIS ON THE FRONTIER.

CAN the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? Can we hope for any action that is not only vigorous, but also steadfast, from an invertebrate Government? For the last two or three weeks we have been expecting something like a miracle to be wrought by the unaided genius and force of Lord Dufferin's remarkable character; for we have been hoping that his Excellency would be able not only to make everything right for us on the Indian side—that is within human power, and that Lord Dufferin has done—but also to give a backbone to the “jelly-fishes” of Downing-street, which seems to be more than mortal can do. It is true that, such is the spasmodic action of a Ministry that is “everything by turns and nothing long”—that oscillates almost daily between Jingoism and peace at any price—it is impossible to say whether our national attitude will remain what it now is, until the hour at which these lines reach the eyes of our readers. But, at the moment of writing, the situation is as follows: While all the world, except a few Russian casuists of extreme effrontery, sees clearly enough that the Russian forces have attacked and slaughtered our allies at a time when negotiations were pending between ourselves and Russia, and at the very moment when the Queen's representative was giving the Ameer the most solemn guarantees of our protection—while we all know that each day's delay is of priceless value to the military plans of the Russians—we are actually sending the ridiculous “explanation” of General Komaroff to be “considered” or answered by Sir Peter Lumsden, when it can reach him in the wilds of north-western Afghanistan!

First, as to General Komaroff's “explanation.” That it completely answers itself, and needs no consideration from Sir Peter Lumsden or anyone else, was the almost unanimous opinion of the English Press yesterday; and we think that the fact is obvious from the very wording of the opening clause. It runs thus:—

On the 25th of March our (General Komaroff's) detachment APPROACHED Dash-Kepri: on our side of the river Kushk, close to the bridge, I found an intrenchment occupied by Afghans.

And so forth. And then follows the aggression of the wicked Afghans on the innocent Russians—the ferocious lamb insulting the poor, harmless wolf. But is not the question absolutely obvious—what business had the Russians to “approach” Dash-Kepri under the circumstances? Will General Komaroff dare to tell us he had no means of knowing of the existence of the Afghan intrenchments “close to the bridge,” until his army had actually came in sight of them? It is unnecessary to go into subsequent affairs, or to ask why General Komaroff, on the 27th, sent out the further “reconnaissance” which seems to have succeeded in luring the Afghans out of their intrenchments; for out of the Russian's own lips it is shown that this Russian “approach” to Dash-Kepri was the beginning of the business.

But the whole thing is precisely of a piece with all our experience of Russian wiles. Mr. H. Sutherland Edwards has just published a full and connected account of “Russian Projects Against India, from the Czar Peter to General Skobelev;” and at this juncture Mr. Gladstone could not better employ some hours of his time than in a careful study of this plain, straightforward historical narrative. Mr. Edwards has largely reproduced what the Russians themselves have avowed and proclaimed on the subject. He has worked up many of the invaluable contributions to the history of Russian relations with Central Asia made by Mr. Robert Michell of the India Office during the last twenty years. And the result is, a record that ought to scatter to the winds all Mr. Gladstone's invincible credulity about Russia's “civilising mission,” the amiable intentions of the “Divine Figure from the North,” and all the rest of the insane figments of Midlothian. Mr. Sutherland Edwards's capital work should be studied by all our readers, side-by-side with the able treatises on the existing situation, just published or about to appear, from the pens of such recognized authorities as Sir Henry Rawlinson, Colonel Malleson, Mr. Marvin, and Major Raverty.

We firmly believe that the only policy that can possibly commend itself to any honest and intelligent Englishman, be he Tory and Radical, is one that shall not for one moment admit of the shadow of a doubt as to our resolute determination honourably to fulfil our plighted word to the Ameer and the Afghan people. If the Russians wish for peace they know they can have it by disavowing the recent outrages, recalling and cashiering General Komaroff, and withdrawing the Russian troops to the north of that “line from Sarakhs to Khoja Saleh,” which was agreed on as approximately marking the limits of Afghan and Turkoman territory. We English earnestly wish for peace, provided it be “Peace with Honour.” It is by no means à cœur léger that we shall engage in this great conflict, but with the full and solemn conviction that we can only avoid it by the sacrifice of all that makes national life worth having. But there must be no shuffling, no paltering with words and “explanations” to cover any further infirmity of purpose. We desire peace, we have striven for peace; but if the Russians are determined to have war, let our spirit be, in all reverence and yet in all earnestness, that of Lord Dalhousie's famous words, “War they shall have, and by God they shall have it with a vengeance!”

THE MIDNAPORE RYOTS CASE.

A REPORT of the notorious "Midnapore Ryots case" has been published, in the form of a pamphlet, by the Indian Constitutional Association in Calcutta. It will probably be in the recollection of some of our readers that this case arose out of the settlement proceedings of certain lands in the district of Midnapore, in which the Government had enhanced the rental of the ryots enormously. The average enhancement was admitted to be 63 per cent., whilst, in some individual cases, it amounted to more than 150 per cent. There is an Indian story on the subject of averages which illustrates their fallaciousness. A traveller, wishing to cross a river, asked how deep it was. He was told that the average depth was three feet. Trusting to this information he stepped boldly in, but unfortunately for him the water was fifteen feet deep in that particular place, and he was drowned. The reader can well imagine in what difficulties these ryots are plunged in when their rent has been enhanced 150 per cent; and it will be little comfort to them to know that the average enhancement of their fellow-ryots was only 63 per cent.

But the ryots entirely objected to this average enhancement of even 63 per cent. They disputed the point before the Settlement Officer, before the Divisional Commissioner, before the Board of Revenue, and before the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. But they got no redress. Nay, worse. When the Board of Revenue and the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal discovered that the ryots had some important points of law on their side, they did not scruple to alter the law. The docile Bengal Legislative Council passed one law in 1878, in the hope of validating the proceedings of the settlement officer; and when that law was found to be insufficient, they passed another law in 1879, in still stronger terms. It would be vain to trouble the English reader with the technical details of these laws. When, however, no redress could be obtained from what are called the Executive Revenue Authorities of Bengal, the ryots were compelled to have recourse to the judicial authorities in the Civil Courts. They first sued in the court of the Native Judge, styled the Moonsiff. From the Moonsiff they went to the English Judge of the district, and finally they came before the chief provincial tribunal, the High Court of Calcutta.

The case was tried in the High Court, before Justices Tottenham and Norris. The Hon. G. P. Evans, with several native advocates, pleaded the case of the ryots. The Advocate-General, Mr. Paul, and his native subordinates, appeared on behalf of the Secretary of State for India, who is the nominal defendant in cases of this description. Mr. Evans is the leading independent member of the Calcutta Bar. He is also a Member of the Legislative Council of the Viceroy. This was one of the incidents which added to the piquancy and importance of the case. Mr. Evans as a Member of Council finds himself engaged on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, in which the Bengal Government proposed to render an enhancement of rent of more than $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. illegal and void, in any contract between an ordinary zemindar and his ryot. As a lawyer before a Court of Justice, he finds himself employed in impugning the proceedings of this same Bengal Government when, on behalf of a zemindar, it maintains its right to enhance the rental of no less than 75,000 ryots to the amount of 63 per cent. on an average. It is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Paul tried to support the acts of the Bengal Government. The estate is not the property of Government, but it belongs to a zemindar, to whom the principal profit of the increased rental would accrue. But it could not be denied that the Government would take an increased revenue from the zemindar in proportion to the increased rental from the ryots. Mr. Paul also pleaded that Mr. Dampier, as the representative of the Board of Revenue, was such a benevolent man, and such a protector of ryots in general, that he could not have consented to do anything unjust to the ryots of Midnapore. But the Judges of the High Court could only deal with Mr. Dampier on the facts before them, without regard for his previously irreproachable character. The Judges found themselves obliged to hold that the proceedings of the Government were wrong from almost the beginning to the end. They were wrong in law, and wrong in fact. If the settlement proceedings were correctly carried out, the Judges admit that the ryots would be liable to certain enhanced rates, but nothing like 63 per cent. It is needless to pursue the case further. The Government of Bengal appear to have been so much ashamed of its own proceedings that they at once acquiesced in the decision of the High Court. The Members of the Indian Constitutional Association have done well to circulate the reports of the case, which tends so fully to expose the unwisdom and injustice of the legislation under the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which seeks to check all freedom of contract between zemindars and ryots, whilst the Government itself thought fit to lord it absolutely over the hapless ryots of Midnapore.

CAPTAIN WHITE'S APPEAL.

(From the West London Standard.)

THE Whitehall Review refers to the efforts being made by our Editor (Captain White) to promote the interests of the Army. Captain White, in another column, makes an "Appeal to the Patriotic" to think somewhat more than they have done of the subject of national defence. We can only say that we hope his appeal may not be in vain, but that reasoning men will read what he writes and endeavour to profit by the advice he gives them.

The Whitehall Review says, "In the course of his interesting lecture at the Royal United Service Institution, on Friday last, on the question of 'Recruiting for Her Majesty's Service,' Lieutenant-Colonel Moody, R.M.L.I., Superintending Officer of Admiralty recruiting, referred in eulogistic terms to Captain C. W. White, military editor of the Army and Navy Gazette, and author of the papers, 'The Truth about the Army,' which lately appeared in our columns. Captain White has lately brought out another brochure, entitled 'Short Service and the Employment of Reserve Soldiers,' and from this Colonel Moody made copious extracts. We laud and idolise 'Tommy Atkins' when he is engaged in fighting our battles. When the 'piping times of peace' return, however, after a final burst of enthusiasm, which is at least as selfish as it is patriotic, we look upon him rather as an expensive but necessary nuisance than otherwise. The soldier in the abstract is a hero worthy of his country's honour and gratitude. In the concrete, however, it is far different. We look askance at him in his blue or scarlet coat brushes against our broadcloth in the streets. We are more than half inclined to resent his intrusion into any of our more respectable places of amusement or resort. We put him below the lowest labourer in our social estimate. We treat him like a criminal for the smallest lapses of duty in the ranks, and leave his wife and children practically to starve if he loses his life in our service. If he survives the ordeal of battle, pestilence, and starvation—which, thanks to our marvellous commissariat and medical arrangements, are about equal risks—we turn him adrift and treat him as a vagabond. These points Captain White takes up with his accustomed vigour and eloquence. So well does he plead the soldier's cause that his little work only requires to be read in order to bring home to the public generally the reasons for our getting such indifferent stuff into the ranks, and the remedies both for the soldier's grievances and the nation's loss. It would be difficult to establish more thoroughly than Captain White has done the fact—of which England ought to be heartily ashamed—that, under our short-service system, soldiering in only too many instances means ruin, and the soldier, after spending the best years of his life in the service, is discharged, to meet suspicion, coldness, and distrust. Those who are to-day exciting the admiration and sympathy of the country by their sturdy heroism will, many of them, be among us shortly as reserve men. What their probable treatment will be, judging from the past, Captain White has graphically described."

UNDER the instructions of the Government of India, a conference on caste is assembling at Lahore. The object is to consult as to the possibility of a uniform treatment of castes at the next census.

PRODUCE MARKETS.

INDIAN TEA.—Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson report as follows on the Tea Market, from March 26 to April 9:—Since the issue of our last circular business has been on a small scale owing to the Easter vacation. At the early part of last week sales were held comprising 9,600 packages, 900 of these being Ceylon Tea; the biddings were brisk and prices very firm, except for low Fannings and broken tea. To-day 2,400 packages have been sold at auction, including 600 packages of second-hand tea; demand was strong, and rates generally showed an improving tendency. About 14,000 packages are already advertised for sale on the 13th and 14th instant. The total shipments from Calcutta up to March 31 were 61½ million pounds; allowing half a million for April shipments, the import for the 12 months ending May 31 will amount to 64½ millions against 63 millions last year, while the consumption will be 68 millions against 60½ millions last season. The deliveries of Indian during March were 8,654,000lbs. against 4,990,000lbs. in 1884—and of China Tea 17,459,000lbs. against 12,863,000lbs.—the increase being 73 per cent. upon Indian as compared with 36 per cent. upon China Tea, a noteworthy fact for those concerned in the future of Indian Tea. Heavy duty payments are still being made.

THE QUETTA RAILWAY.—It is stated that the railway plant for the military line through the Bolan Pass to Quetta, which is to be at once commenced, has been to a great extent stored in India for some years. When the Quetta railway extension was originally projected rails and sleepers were collected for the purpose. Some miles of these rails were subsequently used elsewhere, but the store has lately been replenished by the despatch of material from England. The hired transport Duke of Devonshire, on proceeding to Suakim with troops six weeks ago, took out many tons of flange rails, which, after debarking her troops, she conveyed to Bombay. Several ships going out to India within the last two months have had tonnage of metal rails, and it is understood that sufficient plant has now been collected for the construction of the projected line.

THE FLORA OF CEYLON.—Some idea of the richness and variety of the flora of Ceylon may be gathered from a paper recently read on this subject by Dr. Trimen at a meeting of the Ceylon branch of the Asiatic Society. The systematic catalogue of Ceylon plants which Dr. Trimen presented to the society includes about 3,250 species. The flowering plants number about 3,000, and the ferns 250. Of the former, 285 are not native, but aliens, colonists, denizens, or casual waifs and strays. There are numerous foreign fruit trees and many tropical weeds. A comparison with other parts of the globe shows that the Ceylon flora is a rich one for its position, and probably more so than in any equal area in India. The remarkably large proportion of indigenous growth, 29 per cent., is probably larger than that of any other continental island except Madagascar. Comparisons have been made in this respect with other countries, from the British Isles, with over 1,400 species and probably none indigenous, to New Zealand, with 72 per cent. peculiar to the country. Ceylon has derived the bulk of its flora from continental peninsular India, only about 130 species (besides the indigenous ones) not occurring there. The separation of the northernmost part of the island from the mainland has been shown to be geologically recent. Of indigenous genera Ceylon only possesses 20, and these contain 48 species. Of the indigenous species, all but about 73 are members of genera also represented in peninsular India. But there are also in Ceylon species of genera not met with in peninsular India, identical with those of other countries. In all, no less than 100 genera of flowering plants are represented in Ceylon which are not to be found in the peninsula. At least four-fifths of the island of Ceylon present almost precisely the floral characteristics of the Carnatic, the indigenous species being closely allied to those so that district of Southern India.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 21, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, April 3rd; Madras and Allahabad, April 1st; Calcutta, March 31st; Ceylon, March 31st; Burma, March 27th.

THE Indian telegrams this week, of course, are largely occupied with the all-absorbing topic of the Russian advance. There is, however, unhappily another cause of disquietude, due entirely to the Government's own perversity in forcing a Land Act on an unwilling community at a most inopportune moment. We give elsewhere the Maharajah Narendra Krishna's very important and significant telegram, which furnishes us with a brief summary of the proceedings of yesterday's Indignation Meeting in Calcutta.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times informs us that the attitude of Mr. Gladstone's Ministry, in regard to the Russian aggression on our Afghan allies, causes great anxiety in India. The infinite danger of giving Russia a diplomatic triumph, as the result of their wanton and "unprovoked" outrage at Penjdeh, is universally recognised there—as it is most certainly recognised also in England by everyone who knows anything whatever of the subject.

"THERE is no difference of opinion here," says the Times correspondent, "as to Russia having no shadow of right to that place." Of course not. Among honest and impartial observers it is impossible that there should be any such difference of opinion. The immense strategical importance of the position, as dominating both the line of march from Merv to Herat and the communications between Herat and Afghan Turkestan (Balkh and Maimana), is obvious. Moreover, the possession of Penjdeh would infallibly enable Russia to consolidate her influence over the whole of the Hazara tribes of Western and Central Afghanistan.

WE have already noticed Lord Dufferin's wise and statesmanlike speech on the crisis, delivered at Lahore last Wednesday. Equal sagacity and foresight are manifested in the speech of Thursday, in reply to the address of the Indian Association. The Viceroy confirms, in the most striking and significant terms, those views with regard to the depth and sincerity of the loyalty of our Indian fellow-subjects which have been so often insisted on in these columns.

WE hail with especial pleasure the strong words of the Viceroy, in which his Excellency declares his confidence in the full power of the Indian Empire to meet and conquer all possible attacks that may be made upon it.

WE earnestly call on Lord Dufferin to follow up his re-assuring speech by the act of grace which seems to be its natural sequel—the grant to the people of Bengal of the withdrawal of a measure which is undoubtedly detested by all classes of the community alike. With the withdrawal or suspension of the Bengal Tenancy Act will disappear the last vestiges of the unfortunate class-differences of the past two years.

THE action of the Nepal Durbar in so promptly calling out its levies, and drilling them for immediate co-operation with Her Majesty's Imperial forces, is one of the most important and gratifying signs of the approach of a new era in the history of our relations with the brave and hardy race of the Ghoorkas. Nothing can be more cordial than the relations now subsisting between Englishmen and Sikhs; and there is no reason in the world why this cordiality should not be equally apparent in our relations with every other race in India.

It is with deep thankfulness that we learn that the reports of scarcity in the Beerbhoom district are now found to have been much exaggerated.

FROM Meshed it is reported that the Russians are compelling the Sarik Turcomans to construct a military road through Penjdeh towards Herat. Well may our Afghan allies feel "great anxiety" to learn what really is the policy of Her Majesty's Government.

LAST Friday's meeting of the Society of Arts was one of peculiar interest for our Bombay friends. The valuable paper of Mr. Jehangeer Dosabhoj Framjee on "The Parsis and the Trade of Western India" dealt exhaustively with a most important subject. We give elsewhere a brief report of the proceedings.

THE Hindoo Patriot says:—At the last meeting of the Central Committee of the Landholders, a protracted consultation was held as to what steps should be taken to save the people of Bengal, both zemindars and raiyats, from the disastrous consequences of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which has now become the law of the land. The feeling expressed amounted almost to desperation. Official placidity may smile at the terrors of the zemindars, and Sir Rivers Thompson may, with the easy conscience of the victor, assure Lord Dufferin that there is nothing in them, and that things will now run in their humdrum everyday course; but the zemindars feel that the day of their tribulation and ruin is at hand, and that what had belonged to them and their ancestors for centuries, or had been acquired by the savings of a lifetime, are about to pass away from their hands—not owing to any fault of their own, but by an outrageous act of official high-handedness. Their only hope rests upon the sense of fair-play of the great English nation, and they proposed to appeal to it with the utmost earnestness possible. A deputation to England of the leading zemindars was the idea which found most favour, and the ways and means of carrying it out were discussed at considerable length. The difficulties to be overcome, however, are stupendous. Hindu devotion to religion is more earnest and unflinching than of any other nation on the face of the earth. With them the hereafter ranks infinitely higher than the present, and men of the highest rank in society, who by their devotion to their religion and rigid abhorrence to strict morality would be worthy of trust as representatives, are just the men who most do seek solace, for all woes of this world, in their religion, and for them the task of setting aside hereafter for the present is a most arduous one. But men when desperate do many things which ordinary reason cannot calculate upon, and we shall not attempt, therefore, to forecast what the result will be of the last deliberations of the zemindars.

THE Times of India has the following obituary till the departure of the mail, April 3rd:—

Shaikh Sharf-ud-din, C.I.E., of Shikarpore; Captain F. J. Romilly, R.E., and Lieutenant E. M. B. Newman, R.E., attached to the Madras Sappers and Miners; Major J. M. W. Von Beverhoudt, 17th Bengal N.I. (the Loyal Poorbeahs); Captain James Francis Raleigh Jardine, Invalid Establishment, late 6th Bombay N.I.

A GENERAL ORDER, issued by the Commander-in-Chief and dated so long back as March 7, lays down the kit for officers on active service. The coat will be khaki, drill, or serge according to climate and season; trousers khaki, drill, or serge; riding breeches, khaki or Bedford cords; riding boots, any pattern up to the knee; helmet, regulation with cover; sword belt, Sam Brown pattern, the sword scabbard of wood and leather; sword-knot, brown leather, flat strap, and tassel; revolver, .450 in case on belt; binoculars in brown leather case; haversack, khaki drill; water bottles, Silver's pattern. The above refers particularly to the kit for Royal Engineers, but holds good in the case of almost all officers. Infantry officers will wear the regulation helmet, khaki drill covered or ordinary cover, and boots of usual marching pattern.

Telegraphic Intelligence.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent at Calcutta, dated April 19:—

"The question of constituting native volunteer corps continues to occupy public attention, and is a frequent theme of the native Press. The Madras Government, while thanking the native gentlemen who desired to join the volunteer Artillery, has refused to sanction their enlistment. The Supreme Government has not yet answered the petition sent from Calcutta.

"It is, perhaps, unfortunate that the question should have been mooted at a time like the present; and it would seem from a passage in one of the Viceroy's Lahore speeches that this is his opinion. A deputation having mentioned this subject, as well as that of a revision of the Arms Act, he told them that both were matters which must be discussed and adjudicated upon on their own merits apart from the circumstances of the hour. He added that the Government could not commit a greater mistake than that of allowing itself to be hurried incidentally into the decision of such grave and important questions. Those questions, even if resolved in the manner they desired, could not receive effectual application universally throughout India or unaccompanied by a qualifying regulation which it would require great forethought and consideration to devise. It may, therefore, be surmised that Lord Dufferin, while sympathising with the loyal aspirations of the natives, will not allow his sympathies to hurry him into any rash and ill-considered action in the matter.

"The Viceroy spent some days last week in Lahore, visited all the places of interest there, received deputations from various public bodies, and made several interesting speeches. I have already quoted some of his remarks. The only other speech which I need mention was delivered in reply to an address of the Sing Sabha—a body representing the Sikh nationality. To them Lord Dufferin spoke in terms of the highest admiration of the Sikh community—a people whose valour in battle was only equalled by their generosity in the hour of victory and their fortitude under adversity. He expressed his gratification at hearing that they were now devoting themselves to the cause of education, and said that he would always be ready to help them along the path of progress.

"Lord Dufferin and his suite left Lahore on Friday, stopped for a few hours at Amritsir, and is expected to arrive in Simla tomorrow.

"The Duke and Duchess of Connaught left Meerut yesterday for Simla, where they will remain for a week before returning to Meerut. The Duke will then take four months leave and proceed to England with the Duchess, but will return to India at any moment on his services being required in the event of complications. The projected visit of their Royal Highnesses to Egypt and Constantinople has been abandoned.

"A report published by the Bengal Government shows that the statements made regarding the scarcity in the Beerbhoom district were greatly exaggerated. As yet there is no actual need of Government aid; but the Commissioner fears that there may be some distress before the next crop is ripe. He recommends the making of advances under the Loans Act and a careful watch over the district during May."

"Two bronze equestrian statues, representing the late Jung Bahadour and the present Prime Minister, Sir Runodeep Singh, were unveiled by the Maharajah at Khatmandoo a few days ago. The ceremony seems to have closely followed European precedents, and was made the occasion for the delivery of several laudatory speeches.

"Notwithstanding the more peaceful tone of the telegrams recently received, the military preparations proceed with unabated vigour. It is true the Ameer at Rawul Pindi expressed himself as confident that he was able to repel a Russian attack without the aid of British troops, and in deference to his wish the orders given to Major Nicholson and other Engineer officers to fortify Herat have been countermanded. But the Indian Government wisely considers this confidence on the Ameer's part no reason why it should relax its efforts to be ready to give him support if necessary or to attack the enemy in other quarters.

"The troops lately assembled at Rawul Pindi are for the most part returning to their respective stations, but they will be held ready to take the field at a moment's notice. Meanwhile stores are being poured into Quetta and Pishin, and it will be easy to mass a formidable army on the frontier if required.

"The attitude of the Ministry causes much anxiety, and fears are freely expressed that it may give Russia a diplomatic triumph by consenting to negotiate regarding the possession of Penjdeh. There is no difference of opinion here as to Russia having no shadow of right to that place, and it is felt that peace would be too dearly purchased at the price of the cession of a post which is not only one of the highest strategic importance, but one the possession of which would put Russia in a position gradually and stealthily to extend her influence over the large and powerful tribes of the Hazaras, who are practically masters of the country from the upper waters of the Murghab as far as Ghuzni.

"The speech last Wednesday at Lahore, in which the Viceroy made his first public reference to the crisis, has already been telegraphed to you.

"On Thursday Lord Dufferin received an address from the Indian Association, and in reply he referred to the noble and generous spirit of loyalty shown by the Princes and people of India. The Queen and the English nation, he continued, would recognise alike their courage, loyalty, and sagacity. For who could count the calamities which would fall upon her people were India to become the theatre of a foreign invasion, or were her ancient but revitalised and progressive civilisation, and her present peace and tranquillity, overwhelmed by the irruption of fire and sword, and all their revolutionary concomitants?

"But, happily, continued the Viceroy, the dangers were too remote to affect any practical scheme of politics or administration. The normal forces of the Empire were more than sufficient to maintain the inviolability of its territory, and among those forces none was more invincible than the consciousness that behind the organised and disciplined Anglo-Indian armies was stored up an inexhaustible fund of popular loyalty and courageous enthusiasm. His hearers might rest assured that should circumstances require it the Government would know how to avail itself in an effectual manner of their noble offers of personal service, as well as of those of the contingents of the native States so generously placed at its disposal.

"It will be felt that Lord Dufferin did not say a word too much in praise of native loyalty. That loyalty has been expressed on all sides in most unequivocal terms, and displayed in a manner which has taken even the warmest admirers of the native character entirely by surprise, and whatever be the end of the present crisis it may be hoped that it will at least have the effect of drawing closer the bonds of union between Englishmen and natives, and of entirely effacing all recollection of the unhappy differences of two years ago.

"The Nepaulese Government has called out 12,000 Goorkhas, and is drilling them in anticipation of the Indian Government accepting its offer of assistance. It is stated that the Goorkhas evince eagerness to enter the British service.

"Accounts have just been received that the splendid reception and kind treatment of the Ameer at Rawul Pindi have had a marked effect in Afghanistan, and that the popular feeling there is now more friendly towards the British than at any time since the last war."

The following is from the Times correspondent at Jamrood, dated April 16:—

"The Ameer left Jamrood this morning, accompanied by Colonel Waterfield, Commissioner at Peshawur, Brigadier-General Gordon, Aide-de-Camp to the Viceroy, and Major Warburton, Political Officer in charge of the Khyber, and escorted by the 1st Bengal Cavalry.

"Under the Jamrood Fort were drawn up the garrison and half a battery of artillery, commanded by Captain Brunner, and the 12th Bengal Cavalry, by Colonel Green. A salute of twenty-one guns was fired as the Ameer passed into independent territory.

"It was a beautifully bright morning, and the Shagai heights were everywhere running with streams, while a considerable body of water was passing through the Shadi-Bagiyar mouth of the pass.

"The Ameer was in the best of spirits. He remarked that the road between Cabul and Herat by the Baman and Siri-Jangal was as good as the Khyber, but he had not seen it. He had distributed the road among the tribes for making and repair.

"Reinforcements had left Candabar, he said, for Herat. He did not believe that Russia would not yield to remonstrance, or that she could excuse her aggression. Only when all arguments had failed was war to be thought of, when the Afghan nation would rise as one man to repel the invader.

"His policy, he added, was determined and unchanged. It was founded on common sense, not oaths. His people must accept it as he did, and trust him as he had been trusted by England.

"Never, pursued the Ameer, would they give up an inch of Afghan territory, or allow their country to be the highway of a Russian army. This would mean occupation, and the protection of a long line of communication; and would be to them ruin, and the loss of all independence. His people would see this, and find that England was helping them to maintain their freedom."

"JAMROOD, April 19.

"Until a late hour yesterday night the Ameer sat in his tent at Lundi Kotal, talking energetically to the political officer, and this morning he passed down to Lundi Khana, escorted by the cavalry. He noticed the unusual streams and waterfalls in the pass, and remarked to the Commissioner of Peshawur, who was riding beside him, that the friendship between the British Government and Afghanistan, which had lately taken fresh root, would grow, as all nature did, under the influence of such a timely rainfall.

"At Trkham, the boundary of the Khyber and of Afghan territory, he received the cavalry salute, and bade adieu to Colonel Chapman, commanding the troopers. He then shook hands warmly with Colonel Waterfield and General Gordon, and with a kindly "Khuda Hafiz" to each and all, passed into his own country, on the way to Cabul. The members of his retinue relaxed somewhat from their usual reserve, and nodded pleasantly to the British officer.

"The Ameer will probably take back with him some of the Jellalabad troops, sending those now in Cabul to Candahar.

"His Highness seemed much interested in the management of the Khyber. In the Afridis and their chief he has no fault whatever. He made certain suggestions about the enforcement of their responsibilities; but as neither mishap nor offence has occurred during either passage, Major Warburton's system can scarcely be improved upon. The Afridis received him respectfully, but as if they knew his opinion of them. The Ameer cannot but admit that money, arms, and ammunition—all most tempting to the race—pass with absolute safety under their guardianship alone.

"Self-interest, educated by trustful supervision, will perhaps show similar results in Afghanistan proper."

The following is from the Times correspondent at Meshed, dated April 20:—

"The Russians are still at Alk Tapa. General Komaroff has gone to Sarakhs, and Colonel Alikhanoff to Yulatan.

"The Penjeh Sariks hold aloof from the Russians as much as possible and are anxious for our return.

"The Russians are obliging the Sariks to construct a military road towards Herat through Penjeh.

"Great anxiety prevails among the Afghans to learn what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government. That policy has been thus described by a Heratee. Referring to the Mission, he said: 'It has not the face to go or the intention to stay.'"

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE GRIEVANCES OF THE INDIAN TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

(From the Times of India.)

As a branch of the Public Works, the Telegraph Department, though small, is a unit of paramount importance to the State. Its officers work in an unassuming way, and silently extend their network of wires over the face of the country. They accompany from time to time such military expeditions as may be organised against outlying and savage tribes, and in such cases their exertions have uniformly gained for them well-merited commendation. They are the pioneers of civilisation in some of the wildest parts of the country, where they not only construct new lines of communication, but annually maintain their efficiency through pathless jungles. But they are a small body of officers, and are widely scattered, being liable to service in any province of India or British Burmah; and consequently, they have not the same opportunities of making their grievances known, or the same facilities for getting them redressed, as those of the larger and more concentrated departments of Government. It is not necessary to enter into details of the organisation or growth of this branch of the public service; but a clear statement of the present position of some of its officers, together with the causes to which it may be attributed, will be sufficient to enable the public to estimate how far they have a substantial grievance, and how far the action of Government is responsible for the existing state of affairs. In the year 1868 there were 65 officers in the grade of Assistant-Superintendent, the sanctioned establishment being 88, and the number of superior appointments being only 20! The department was, therefore, short-handed by 23 officers. In that year a new scheme for recruiting the department was inaugurated, and within the next four years 72 additional Assistant-Superintendents were appointed in England under a scheme requiring far higher educational qualifications than were previously demanded, to a department that was already nearly fully officered with exceptionally young men; for many of those previously appointed entered at the early age of 14 to 15. Meantime the sanctioned establishment remained unaltered, nor were the number of higher appointments increased in a corresponding ratio.

In 1872, while this policy was still in progress, the young men, who were being brought out to India under the above circumstances, fully foresaw what the result of such a disastrous procedure must be, and they jointly memorialised the Viceroy and Governor-General of India on the subject of "the almost hopeless prospects of promotion" which were even then clearly foreshadowed. The hopes of early advancement held out to them in the Secretary of State's circular, which had induced them to come out, entirely faded away when it became generally known by what young men all the higher appointments were filled. The Government of India thought differently, and in replying to the memorial pronounced the opinion "that the only point which requires consideration is that regarding the periods necessary to qualify for increments of salary;" and under the above ruling Assistant-Superintendents have from time to time been favoured with "special service increments" in special cases. Dissatisfied with the answer vouchsafed to them by the Government of India, the junior officers determined to submit a joint memorial to the Secretary of State for India, drawing attention to their previous memorial, and pointing out that not only were their prospects disheartening, but that the India Office Circular which had induced them to apply for the appointments was at least misleading, as it failed to draw attention to the extremely early age at which many of those who filled the higher appointments were entertained. That memorial never reached its destination. It was filed in the Office of the Director-General, who regretted that he could not give it his support. In his reply thereto he ventured to give a résumé of what he presumed the Secretary of State might reply to it; he derided the arguments and conclusions of the memorialists, and finally recommended its withdrawal. The recommendation was unfortunately adopted, and the officers of the Telegraph Department were left to digest the following sentence: "It will be early enough to ask for relief of your grievances when you can from the experience of 10 years prove them to exist." Those ten years have expired: it has been a long and bitter trial, and the grievances are proved to exist to the following extent:—In the Distribution Return of the Telegraph Department for the 31st March, 1884, it will be seen that out of a sanctioned establishment of 50 (and an actual establishment of 69!) Assistant-Superintendents, there were 44 whose services extended over periods varying from 12 to 33 years, drawing salaries of Rs. 500 per month and under; while at the same time there are a sufficient number of young men holding the appointments above them to keep the majority of those 44 out of their promotion for another ten years.

From time to time correspondents have drawn attention to this state of things in our columns and those of our contemporaries, and we remember being much struck in 1881 by a series of letters we printed from "Oliver Twist" and "Hope Deferred." "Oliver Twist" puts his own case very forcibly. He passed the Direct Commission examination with credit in 1867, and inferred that his position and future prospects would be as good as those of his contemporaries in the Indian Army, if he had not been persuaded to decline the offer of a commission, and on the advice of an influential friend to enter the Government Telegraph Department. He commenced on a salary of Rs. 200, rising in increments of Rs. 25 to a maximum monthly salary of Rs. 450. This amount was all he drew after thirteen years' service, and seventy-four out of ninety-four Assistants had then all reached the maximum, some of them having put in from twenty-five to thirty-eight years' service. Of the twenty uncovenanted men in the superior grade, however, one drew Rs. 1,800 after twenty-four years' service; four from Rs. 1,050 to Rs. 1,500, with a maximum service of twenty-four years; six from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,000; and nine from Rs. 600 to Rs. 750. "Hope Deferred" also told a pathetic tale of the so-called reorganisation scheme which came into effect on the 1st April, 1880. Twenty-six of the Assistant-Superintendents were by this scheme to be promoted to a newly-created interior grade of Superintendents on Rs. 600 a month, while the remaining seventy were to draw Rs. 50 in excess of their present pay, but to have no substantial hope of any rise beyond Rs. 500 a month. The vacancies among the Superintendents who are in the prime of life averaged one per annum. The seventieth Assistant-Superintendent might then confidently reckon upon seeing himself gazetted a Superintendent not later than the year of grace 1949! Virtually, therefore, the maximum remuneration for an Assistant-Superintendent is only Rs. 50 per mensem higher than that enjoyed by the youngest member of the Civil Service. Men of sixteen years' service who were brought out here under special covenants with the Secretary of State are, to put it in another way, still in the same grade as that to which they were first appointed, and are now drawing salaries no higher than some of the Cooper's Hill Engineers of two and three years' service who have received their promotion under the reorganisation scheme lately sanctioned. It is surely not too much to expect that the Government which brought about the present stagnation in promotion, in defiance of the protests of those with whom they had flooded a small department, should take exceptional measures to relieve those who have shown so much patient endurance. It is true that a partial reorganisation, which took effect from the 1st April, 1880, has been introduced. But the fact that the state of things depicted above is the result of four years' working of that reorganisation proves that the remedy has fallen far short of what is needed. The time is now rapidly passing away when any measure of relief will have the effect of permanently ameliorating the position of those who were appointed between 1868 and 1872. For it will be impossible for them to accumulate sufficient savings to enable them to eke out a reduced pension in respectable comfort. Many will be precluded, under the existing rules, by the smallness of their salaries, from drawing the maximum pension to which their length of service entitles them. The irony, therefore, of proffering new pension rules to such men adds fresh gall to the bitterness of their reflections. Moreover, the new pension rules sanctioned in the Gazette of 24th January, 1885, are made inapplicable to some of those who at present stand in the way of promotion.

THE ETHICS OF THE TENANCY ACT.

Fifteen years ago, when the Government of Lord Mayo resolved upon setting aside the Permanent Settlement by imposing the Road Cess, grave difficulties arose as to how to assess and realise the cess without incurring heavy collection charges, and bringing on inquisitorial visitations on the raiyats. Official ingenuity failed to solve the problem. But a native gentleman, a zemindar, thought the opportunity a good one for removing a long-felt grievance. He suggested that every zemindar should submit a return in full detail of all his tenantry, and undertake to realise for the Government, free of charge, the amount of the cess in return for adequate legal facility in collecting rent. The Government was morally bound, both by its position as a Government in a civilised country and as a party to a contract by which it required the other contracting party to collect and pay, punctually at a given day, the proceeds of its land revenue, under the most stringent penalty, to provide the facility without demanding a further return; but it did not, and the opportunity was thought a good one to propose the scheme. The idea was grasped at with avidity by the Government, and the most solemn promises were made for the quid pro quo. The Bill for the Road Cess was at once got up and passed, and a Bill for facility in collecting rent was, likewise, got up, but could not be passed on account of some difficulty or other. The promise for the quid pro quo was renewed by Sir Richard Temple, but not redeemed, though a second Bill was devised. The promise was again renewed by Sir Ashley Eden, when he imposed additional burdens on the zemindars in the form of the Public Works Cess. But the promise again remained unfulfilled. The two cesses, amounting to 75 lacs, the cost of collecting them, about 8 per cent., and the loss by unavoidable failure in realisation, coming up to ten per cent. of the rental added a grievous burden of about a million of pounds sterling on the zemindars. But the facility for collecting rents, in the hope of which the burden was suggested and undertaken, remained unrealised. The Government, however, did not cease to renew, and to profess to hold itself bound by its promise, and at last brought forward the Rent Bill, to redeem its engagements. That Bill has now transformed its chrysalis state into the butterfly of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the long and oft-repeated promise of relief has culminated in the total deprivation of the power of distraint, which had hitherto afforded the most important facility which the zemindars had of recovering their rent, and which is recognised, in one form or another, as the most legitimate means of collecting rent by every civilised Government. We are averse to charge our Government with any improper motive, with any breach of faith, with any want of respect for promises; the persons concerned are all honourable men, and they can mean no wrong; but the facts remain that an evil was admitted; that three Lieutenant-Governors and three Viceroys repeatedly promised frankly, officially, and in the most solemn manner to remove it, as much in consideration of a substantial and very valuable service, as from a sense of the duty they owed to the people; and that the redemption of the promise has now been made by aggravating the evil a hundredfold. The zemindars may be bad men, wicked men, oppressive men; but their grievance was admitted to be true, and the Government pledged itself as solemnly, sincerely and faithfully as any civilised Government can to its subjects, and the pledge has been redeemed by making that grievance infinitely more oppressive. Sir Rivers Thomyson is an honourable man, a God-fearing man, and a man of vast and versatile experience in state-craft, and we appeal to him to say if this mode of redeeming a promise is worthy of a high and mighty civilised Government? We have no hesitation in saying that such a mode of redeeming a promise, if adopted in private life, would be condemned in words which we do not feel disposed to write down. We do not wish here to say a word against security for the tenures of raiyats; let it be as perfect as human law can make it; but we do hold, and every business man will agree with us, that such security is compatible with a redemption of promise. We are no zemindars ourselves, and our sympathies are entirely with the raiyats. But above all our likes and dislikes—our sympathies and antipathies—we have a respect for abstract justice, and that determination to abide by our promises, which among Englishmen is known by the name of "word of honour." Policy, or politics, or statecraft may suggest diverse interpretations of the words, but, as private individuals, we can only look upon them from our own standpoint, and we cannot avoid the conviction that the promise of Government in this instance has most miserably miscarried, and that the odium of this sad miscarriage rests, primarily, with Sir Rivers Thompson, and secondarily, with the Council of Lord Dufferin. Divested of the evil surroundings which Sir Rivers and his officers had conjured up, the question was a very simple one, and it pains us to observe that Lord Dufferin and his advisers should have failed to grasp it. We know of no one so ignorant or so foolish as would for a moment deny that the Government has an inherent right to legislate for the protection of every class of the people, but we are among those who believe that protection for one class is not subversive of the sanctity of pledges to another, and in the present instance the Government could have kept its promise to the zemindar, and at the same time have done everything fair for the raiyat. It is the paramount duty of Government to afford all due protection to life and property in regard to every class of its subjects; but, alas! our Government has thought fit to injure one class for benefiting another, and shown to the world what its pledges are, at least in one instance—mere sound and nothing more.

And even as flagrant is this breach of promise so is the breach of faith involved in the alterations made in the terms of the Permanent Settlement. So much has, however, been already written on this subject by the different parties concerned, not excepting the highest judicial officers of the State, that it would be a waste of time to dilate on them here. The authors of the Act have repeatedly protested against the charge of breach of faith; but the protests have sufficed to convince none, and the belief is universal that they were intended more to silence opposition than to demonstrate the fact. Anyhow, the conviction is universal that a powerful Government has done a wrong—it may be a mistaken one, but it exists—and no Government which desires to avoid offending the sympathy of its subjects should have given cause for such a conviction to be formed. If there be any truth in the saying that next to justice is the conviction that justice has been done, it has been sadly contravened in the present instance.—Hindoo Patriot.

INDIAN TEA FOR THIBET.

It is only natural that, with our increasing outturn of tea, serious regard should be paid to the opening up of new markets; but while advocating such enterprise in every part of the world beyond sea where effort is at all likely to be successful, we may wisely, also, look nearer home, and see if there is no opening at our own doors, so to speak, for the absorption, to a tangible extent, of our product.

It is pointed out that within 100 miles of Darjeeling is a people who drink tea morning, noon, and night, and who practically use no other beverage; yet this people, as things at present are, and have all along been, depends for its supply of tea upon a country 1,200 miles away. Even the Shanghai papers express the belief that the Indian gardens can supply Thibet with teas of ordinary quality cheaper than China can—or at any rate does; but owing to our ridiculous recognition of the policy of isolation practised by Thibet, we can neither go to them, nor can they come to us. This is the more unfortunate and undesirable, inasmuch as there exist the capabilities of a large return trade in gold, musk, live stock, wool, and many other items.

The recent visit of Mr. Macaulay over the frontier has once again brought this subject prominently forward, but at present Government do not seem inclined to take any action regarding it, nor to avail themselves of the information so laboriously acquired by the mysterious "pundit," who, crossing from Darjeeling in 1878, spent some four years in exploring the country, and ascertaining its capacity for profitable trade with us.

The English Government seldom hesitates at meddling with its neighbours in Europe, but it has a holy horror of anything approaching interference, even in way of commercial friendliness, with its Indian neighbours. The assumption that Thibet desires to remain a sealed country is founded on no sufficient ground of information, for we have never approached that country in a way needed to enlighten them as to our real objects. There has always been, indeed, a nervous fear shown lest it should be thought that we had any desire to become friends, and the touch-me-not policy is quite as much of our own making as that of the Thibet Government. Commercial instincts and advantages have elsewhere proved sufficient to break down the firmest barriers; but in this instance we choose to ignore our opportunities, from a nervousness arising more within ourselves than our neighbours.

As the Times recently put it:—Here is a large market waiting, if we only seek admission. And we should be able to show Thibet that we were not desirous of acting selfishly, but reciprocally, for we are told that in one item alone—wool—the local production is prodigious; yet from absence of demand, it is no source of wealth to the country. Then is it not to be assumed that if the Thibetans were permitted to exchange this one item alone, for our tea, they would gladly do so, and thus realise value for that which is to them, at present, almost valueless? We have mentioned one article of interchange only, but it cannot be doubted there are many more; and as the richest parts of Thibet are as it were within a stone's throw of us, it seems little short of suicidal to neglect our opportunity. The highest to the lowest inhabitants of Thibet are said to be keen traders, but we are not allowed to utilise this commercial fact, either for their own good or ours.

The political difficulties which are supposed to exist are more, we believe, in the way of sentiment than of fact; and as there are no quarrelsome neighbours to interfere with any understanding to which we might be able to come with Thibet, it seems somewhat inexplicable that we make no attempt to open up and stimulate commercial intercourse with this near and yet so far-off country.

The subject is one of sufficient importance to justify discussion and consideration by our Tea Associations here and at home, and if it could be shown (as it is believed it could) that nothing but good would be likely to result, we might find the Government willing to give some attention to the subject.—Indian Tea Gazette.

THE NATIVE PRESS ON THE OFFICIAL STATEMENT REGARDING THE TENANCY BILL.

A CONTRADICTION WHICH CONTRADICTS NOTHING.

The late characterisation, in Parliament, by proper epithets, of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, and of the hurry with which it has been pushed through the Council, roused the ire of Lord Dufferin to such an extent that he adopted the extraordinary course of summoning his Council, on Saturday afternoon, after it had been postponed sine die on the morning of the same day, to make a statement, which was meant for a contradiction to the accusations brought against his Government by Lord Wemyss and others in Parliament. Lord Dufferin thought he could meet the accusation that the Bill has been passed simply by the dead weight of official majority in his Council, by saying that there are only eight official while there are twelve additional members. Lord Dufferin, however, conveniently forgot to tell us as to how many there are Government and how many independent members. Of the twelve additional members five only are independent members, viz., Mr. Evans, Mr. Gibbon, Mr. Miller, the Maharajah of Durbhungah, and Baboo Peary Mohun Mukerjee. We cannot include in this list even Mr. Mandlik who occupies a certain position under the Government of Bombay, while Mr. Amir Ali, besides having held Government posts, is a notorious flunkey. It is thus plain that the independent members are in a considerable minority. And when we remember that the Bill which has just passed was the Bill of only three members, all the rest of the Select Committee having recorded dissents from the principle or the main features of the Bill, and that these dissenters, except two, the Maharajah of Durbhungah and Baboo Peary Mohun Mukerjee, while condemning the Bill in one breath as being "dangerously inadequate," and what not, in the next breath voted with the Viceroy that it be passed; and when we also remember that the amendments proposed by the Maharajah and Baboo Peary Mohun Mukerjee after the Bill had come out of the Select Committee and was before the Council were invariably rejected, when we remember all these facts the conclusion is forced upon us that if the Bill had been before an independent legislative assembly, consisting of the same gentlemen who form the Imperial Legislative Council of India, but without the influence of Government domineering in any way over their deliberations, the Bill would have never passed. It is impossible for Lord Dufferin to convince the public, by any amount of subtle reasoning, of the perfect purity of the votes by which the Bengal Tenancy Bill had passed into law, and of the absence of the operation of Government influence in the mind of the voters. As to the second charge that the Bill was hurried through the Council because the Government of India were anxious to go up to Simla, Lord Dufferin pointed out that he was not going to Simla for the next six weeks, and that such and such members of his Government were not going to Simla for some time yet. Granted. But is it not perfectly inconceivable, then, why the Bill should have been at all hurried through the Council? Who wanted the Bill immediately? Not the ryot, not the zemindar, not the native Press, not the Anglo-Indian Press. Who else then? And can Lord Dufferin conscientiously say that the Bill is perfect, so far as it is possible for any human measure to be perfect, or that it could not have attained to greater perfections if it had been postponed for another year? As to the third accusation, namely, that the Bill has not been published after coming out of the Select Committee, Lord Dufferin had nothing to say. In fact, he could say nothing in favour of an omission which is very extraordinary, if not illegal. All things considered, therefore, it is abundantly clear that, irrespective of the intrinsic worthlessness of the Bill, the zemindars have a very substantial grievance even with regard to the manner in which it has been passed into law, and they know very little who believe that every possible effort will not be made for the redress of this grievance.—Indian Chronicle, March 2.

COUNCIL DRAFTS FOR INDIA.—The tenders for Rs.35,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday last at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were, in bills on Calcutta, Rs.2,25,000, average rate 1s. 6.9375d.; Bombay, Rs.4,60,000, average rate 1s. 6.96d.; and Madras, Rs.3,00,000, average rate 1s. 6.6375d.—a total of Rs.9,85,000. Tenders for bills on all Presidencies at 1s 6 15-16d. will receive about 50 per cent., and above in full. Later on two lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Bombay were sold at 1s. 7½d. From the 1st inst. to last week remittances for Rs.78,78,700 had been sold, realising £619,472. The announcement has been made of a further important reduction in the weekly drawings, the amount to be offered next Wednesday being only 20 lakhs.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The shipments of bullion for India, from the 8th to the 15th inst. inclusive, were as follows:—Per Sutlej, April 8, Bombay, £114,000; per Tasmania, April 8, Calcutta, £10,000; per Ancona, April 15, Bombay, £180,000.—From J. Westwood Thompson's Indian Circular.

THE INNS OF COURTS.—At a general examination of students of the Inns of Court, lately held at Lincoln's-inn Hall, the Council of Legal Education awarded to the following natives of India certificates that they had satisfactorily passed a public examination:—Anthony Arratoon Avetoom, Mancherjee Merwanjee Bhownaggee, and Ardesheer Kavasju Sethna. The following students have passed a satisfactory examination in Roman law:—Tahir Uddin Ahmed, Tetlur Biligirangam Ramaswami Arengar, Abdul Ali, Umar Buksh, Byomkes Chakravarti, Mancherji Byramji Dadabhoi, Pandit Bishan Narayan Dar, Syud Mahomed Nabilullah, Lal Pujare, Khushwakt Rai.

VISITORS TO THE SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.—The following is the number of visitors to the Indian section during the past month:—Week ending March 7th, 1,270; March 14th, 1,250; March 21st, 1,314; March 28th, 1,411. Total for the month of March, 6,115. From the opening 15th May, 1880, 693,546.

INSTITUTE OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—At an ordinary meeting on Tuesday, April 14th, Sir Frederick J. Bramwell, F.R.S., president, in the chair, the paper read was on "Rivers running into Tideless Seas, illustrated by the River Tiber," by Mr. W. Shelford, M.Inst.C.E. As a result of the monthly ballot Charles Henry Blackburn, Stud. Inst. C.E., P.W.D., India, and Michael Nethersole, Stud. Inst. C.E., P.W.D., India, were selected as associate members, and Nowrojee Pestonjee, Ahmedabad, India, an associate.

UNCLAIMED INDIA STOCK.—A Government Bill introduced by Mr. Cross, M.P., provides for the transfer to the Secretary of State for India of all India stock on which dividend has not been claimed for ten years. After such a transfer the dividends will be applied by the Secretary of State as part of the revenues of India. However, a list will be kept of the names from which stock is thus transferred, and when any one shows his right to any of the stock to the satisfaction of the Governor of the Bank of England, that officer may direct the stock to be retransferred to him and the dividends to be paid to him. And in case the Governor is not satisfied of the rightfulness of the claim, the claimant may verify it by petition in a summary way in the Chancery Division of the High Court. But before a retransfer public notice must be given in the newspapers, and a period of three months must elapse, so that other claimants may have an opportunity of applying to the High Court. Once the stock is retransferred the Bank will not be liable to a second claimant, but recourse must be had to the transferee, and, if nothing can be obtained from him, on good title being shown the Court may order the Secretary of State to pay to the second claimant such sum as is considered just. In directing that the Secretary of State need not pay to the East India Railway its unclaimed annuities, the Bill mentions that at the purchase of the railway in 1879 the capital of the Company included as much as £23,800 stock, in respect of which no person was registered in the books as proprietor. One clause of the Bill provides that with the sanction of the Secretary of State any Indian railway company may (notwithstanding any provision to the contrary) issue debenture bonds payable to bearer, so as to be negotiable by delivery, or others payable to order, so as to be negotiable by indorsement of the holder; also debenture bonds payable in rupee currency. Provision may also be made for the exchange of one kind of debenture bonds for another on the application of the holder.

THE PARSEES.—On Friday, at the Society of Arts, Mr. Jehanguee Dosabhoi Framjee read an address, in which he dealt at some length with the position of the Parsees in Bombay and their share in the trade of Western India. The Parsees claimed no small part in the commercial development of India, which began by the arrival of European traders on her shores, and which, after progressing by leaps and bounds, now promised to attain dimensions far exceeding the most sanguine expectations. Mr. Framjee then summarised from official reports the facts connected with the trade and navigation of the Presidency of Bombay. The total value of sea-borne trade was in 1883-84 over eighty millions sterling, and amount showed a tendency to increase. He then traced the history of the Parsees, the descendants of the ancient Persians, related how, driven out of their country by the Mahomedan conquest, they took refuge in India, where their history as a racial community dates from the 15th century, the eve of arrival of members of the great trading nations of Europe. Parsees, from being the servants of foreign merchants, were encouraged to become merchants on their own account. They excelled also in various handicrafts, and their work gained reputation all over India. Especially Mr. Framjee traced the connection between the Parsees and the English, and showed that their skill, shrewdness, energy, and trustworthiness made them valuable to the English both in mercantile matters and military operations. The trade with China and other places brought them large profits. They were money-changers, and undertook the advance of sums of money and the delivery of letters; and this duty they performed until in 1852 the Government took it from their hands. In dwelling upon the well-known wealth of Parsees, he said they owed their reputation not so much to manner in which they accumulated it as to the way in which they lavished it in any cause which enlisted their sympathies. In tracing the history of the Parsees down to the present day, he said in conclusion that the advantages enjoyed by the Parsees were due to the generous and beneficent policy of the British nation, who had given to their subjects so large and favourable a share in the conduct of public questions. Such was the glorious and remarkable character of the English administration in India.

PROFESSOR VAMBERY.—Professor Arminius Vambéry will arrive in London on Friday, and on the following Friday, May 1, he will give a lecture on the subject of Herat before the Indian section of the Society of Arts. He is to speak on the 27th and 28th inst. at Sheffield. It is probable that he will deliver other lectures elsewhere, but no definite arrangements are yet made.

NOTICES OF MEETINGS, DIVIDENDS, &c.

DARJEELING COMPANY (LIMITED).—The directors recommend a dividend of 7 per cent., carrying forward about £800 to the reserve account.

THE NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA.—A general meeting of the shareholders will be held at the Cannon-street Hotel on the 22nd inst., at noon.

INDO-EUROPEAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The report states that the revenue from all sources for 1884 amounted to £98,103. The expenses were:—On commercial and general account, £24,639; on maintenance account, £28,684, including £151 paid to the Russian Government; total, £53,323. Deducting the above expenses, taking credit for balance brought over from 1883, and debiting income-tax, there remains the sum of £43,571. From this amount, £10,625 paid for interim dividend, and £5,000 paid to Messrs. Siemens in final liquidation of their agreement of July 6, 1868, have to be deducted, leaving a balance of £27,953 available. The directors propose the declaration of a dividend for the last six months of 17s. 6d. per share, making with the interim dividend already paid 6 per cent. for the year, and a bonus of 10s. per share, making in all 8 per cent. for the year. The balance of £4,578 will be carried to the credit of 1885. The amount received on account of the Persian debt, £1,986, constitutes the first payment on account of the item of £21,846 standing to suspense account, which will be gradually liquidated by similar annual deductions from the royalties payable by the company to Persia.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, &c.—The thirty-first ordinary general meeting of the shareholders was held, on Wednesday last, at the City Terminus Hotel. Mr. William Paterson presided, and having expressed regret at the recent sudden death of their colleague, Mr. F. W. Heilgers, and the retirement of Mr. Bullen Smith, another director, consequent on his appointment as a member of the India Council, observed that the bank was now working under the charter obtained from the Treasury last Christmas, and it would be satisfactory to the shareholders to know that it differed in no important point from the original charter. The past year had proved even more disastrous than its predecessors, owing to various causes, notably the continued depreciation in important articles of Eastern produce, entailing such losses upon firms previously of good repute and means that several had had to succumb. Java, previously so prosperous, had suffered of them severely through the unprecedented decline in sugar, as had also the rice ports, where likewise for years the bank had had a very large and profitable business. The result of these mishaps and consequent failures had, he was sorry to say, necessitated their trenching on the reserve fund to the extent of £50,000. A good deal of this, however, had been owing to exceptional circumstances. Fortunately, £200,000 would still remain at the credit of the reserve fund to provide for such contingencies in future in case of need. Referring to the balance-sheet, they would observe that the Government securities had increased by about £200,000. A portion of that was invested in Australian securities. Their cash balances figured for the large sum of £1,500,000. That was very much larger than it should be, owing to abnormal circumstances in the sphere of their operations. Most of this money was at their agencies, where, during the latter part of the year, there was difficulty in finding employment for money, though at low rates of interest; and rates of exchange had happened to be unfavourable for remittance here, while high rates of discount were ruling on this side. These unfortunate coincidences had this year very materially diminished their profits. As to the future, it was said that the darkest hour was succeeded by the dawn, and, therefore, the looked-for improvement might not be very far off. He concluded by moving the adoption of the report and balance-sheet. Mr. John Jones having seconded the motion, Mr. Joseph Morrison said he regarded the report as very unfavourable, seeing that they had been looking for an improvement now that their great opponent was out of the way. The usual dividend was to be eked out by trenching on the reserve fund. He presumed that the remuneration of the directors remained at £4,000 a year, to which it was increased by the shareholders from £2,800, the maximum under the original charter. That, however, was done when they received 15 per cent. dividends, and he thought the directors' remuneration ought to go back now to the smaller amount. Other shareholders dissented from these views; but one gentleman strongly urged the necessity of reducing the expenses, which had been £104,000 last year, with an actual profit of only £7,000. The chairman, in replying to questions, referred to the heavy decline in sugar, rice, silk, and tea last year, and said he thought that this depreciation alone might suffice to explain the exceptional nature of their losses; but there had also been lack of judgment on the part of one of their agents abroad in placing undue confidence in a certain firm with which the bank had done extensive business for twenty years. This gentleman was no longer on their staff. The fall in the note circulation of the bank was simply accidental, and he believed that at the present moment it was quite as much as ever. With regard to the remarks of Mr. Morrison, they hoped to be able to fill the vacant seats at the Board in the usual way. The remuneration of the directors was precisely the same now as it was when Mr. Morrison shared in it; and he was not aware that that gentleman objected to it at that time. With respect to the expenses, he could only repeat that they had had an exceptionally bad year; and, whether an established bank was doing profitable or unprofitable business, the expenses continued the same. He could, however, assure them that the directors exercised every possible economy. Their fixed capital employed abroad was taken at 1s. 7½d. the rupee. It was settled at that rate a year or so ago, and they had not thought it necessary to alter it. He believed that the Government rate was 1s. 7½d. As to all the other outstandings of the bank, they were made up at the end of the year at the current rates. The motion was then adopted, and resolutions were afterwards passed declaring a dividend for the half-year at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, tax-free, and re-electing the retiring directors and auditors.

BENGAL, UPPER INDIA, &c.

LADY HELEN BLACKWOOD was not able to leave Calcutta with Lord and Lady Dufferin on account of an attack of fever, but the latest accounts report favourable progress.

A TELEGRAM has been received in Calcutta to the effect that a severe hailstorm has swept over the principal division of the Dum Duma Tea Estate in the Luckimpur district, Assam, destroying the flush and doing great damage to the buildings. The other divisions of the estate have escaped.

It is reported from the Garo Hills that a further capture of forty-three elephants has been made in one drive by Mr. Sanderson and his hunters. This brings the total number of elephants caught this season up to 204. The operations have not extended over ten weeks, so that the results must be regarded as highly satisfactory.

WITH reference to the project for extending the Circular and Eastern Canal to Tolley's Nullah via Tolleygunge, and also of improving the Bhangar Canal and Tolley's Nullah, the Statesman hears that the first project is likely to be abandoned, at least for the present, and is to be reserved for future consideration. The work in connection with the two latter projects will be taken in hand early next year. The surveying operations connected with them have been completed, and estimates are now being prepared for submission to the Government of India, who have called for all the papers connected with the schemes.

A LARGE and influential meeting was held in Calcutta on Saturday, the 28th ult., under the auspices of the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association, to inaugurate the Kintal Fund established by the association to improve the dwellings of the Christian poor of Calcutta. Sir Rivers Thompson presided, and opened the meeting with a sympathetic speech. Amongst the speakers were Mr. Harrison, the chairman of the Municipality, and Mr. J. J. Keswick, both of whom testified to the wretched condition in which some of the Christian inhabitants of the city were compelled to live. A number of subscriptions to the fund were announced, including Rs. 200 from the Lieutenant-Governor, Rs. 500 from the Bishop of Calcutta, and Rs. 600 from Mr. Justice Pigot.

THE LATE MAHARAJA OF BURDWAN.—The Calcutta Literary Society, of which the late lamented Maharaja of Bardwane was vice-president, has sent a letter of condolence to his bereaved family, and the Calcutta School (both main and branch) were closed on Saturday in respect for the memory of the deceased.—Statesman.

DR. HASTIE'S INSOLVENCY.—At the Calcutta High Court, in the course of certain applications which were being made, his Lordship the Chief Justice intimated that the matter of the insolvency of the Rev. Dr. Hastie would be heard before two Judges of the Court. The date of hearing was not fixed.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces has warned all officers of his administration who may have taken ordinary furlough, or leave on private affairs, that they cannot avail themselves of it out of India until further orders, which orders, however, are promised speedily. Leave in India may be, taken advantage of, with the liability to recall at any moment.

THE Lucknow paper learns with much regret that Mr. Edward Bickers, F.R.G.S., barrister-at-law, who has been connected with the Oudh Commission ever since the annexation of the province, has sent in his papers with a view to retiring on a pension. In 1858 Mr. Bickers was placed in charge of the Lucknow Treasury, and he is still holding that important charge. Mr. Bickers served as a volunteer during the siege of Lucknow, and sustained so severe a wound in the face (causing fracture of his jaw and impairing his vision) that it has been declared equal to the loss of a limb. On two occasions he was appointed to officiate as Inspector-General of Registration and Superintendent of Excise and Stamps, and during his absence in England he joined the Middle Temple, and after undergoing the usual examination obtained a pass certificate. He was called to the Bar in 1876, and will, probably, after a brief sojourn in England, return to India and practice as a barrister in the Upper Provinces.

MOFUSSIL NOTES.

(From the Indian Planters' Gazette)

MR. J. J. McLEOD has had another of his periodical spills at hockey, but is, we are glad to hear, not damaged much.

THERE is no mistake now as to the commencement of the Darjeeling tea manufacturing season being not so early a one as was anticipated by sanguine people. The weather throughout the winter in spite of being mild, has, owing to its dryness, been steadily against an early season for flushing.

THE Ceylon Observer has been awfully shot over a letter from a Masulipatam Zenana Mission asking for information regarding an asylum for a deaf and dumb girl. "There is no such institution in Ceylon," says the indignant Editor, "send the girl to Calcutta or Madras. We've had to pay twenty-four cents on your letter."

WE have received an admirable little map—scale thirty-two miles to the inch—of the probable theatre of war, illustrating the Afghan-Turcoman-Persian frontiers, the roads and mountain passes and the route taken by the Boundary Commission. It folds up into a paper cover, and is a useful aid to the frontier news with which the journals now teem.

WITH a thorough appreciation of the fact that Chumparun doesn't contain enough liquor to satisfy the thirst of their May meeting, the Motihari people have built a swimming bath. A nod is as good as a wink to a blind horse, but the gang that will foregather at Motihari at the end of May are remarkable for always having their eyes open and with their usual dulness of comprehension will fail to take the hint.

THE terminus of the Darjeeling Railway is being improved and enlarged by the platform accommodation being increased and arrangements being made for more extensive goods storage. The terminus never was a "thing of beauty," and it remains to be seen whether it will be a "joy for ever;" anyhow, the improvements being effected, although they may not add to the outward appearance of the terminus, are certainly calculated to increase its usefulness to the public.

GENERAL WILKINSON inspects the Central Bengal Light Horse on the 23rd instant, and there is to be a big pigstick next day at Chooa, which, save Patkabarree, is perhaps the best boar ground in Lower Bengal; it was there that good horseman, Major Cook, drove his spear clean through both shoulders of one of the biggest tuskers killed during last season. We all hope popular Major Jimmy will come back safe and sound from the Soudan and live to stick many another grim grey boar in sunny Ind.

A FAREWELL and numerous-attended dinner was given at the Darjeeling Club by the neighbouring planters and residents to the popular Deputy-Magistrate, Mr. John White, who is leaving for Doomka, and who has proved himself during his incumbency at the fashionable hill station fully as worthy of praise for the way he has carried out his duties as he did when officiating some years ago at Barrh on the East Indian Railway. Mr. Harrison took the chair, ably backed up by Captain Warne as vice. In proposing the toast of the evening Bob's eloquence was such that he moved even himself to copious tears, while Mr. White's answer was eloquent in the extreme, and showed a proper appreciation of the compliments paid him. The evening was an enjoyable and very wet one.

MADRAS.

THE Secretary of State for India is said to have decided that arrangements for raising the capital for the Neilgherry-Rigi Railway should be made in India and in the London Money Market. The company is to be domiciled in India.

FEMALE education seems to be making considerable progress in the Madras Presidency, for during the year 1883-84 there were no less than 47,000 pupils at the different schools, of whom about 31,000 were Hindus and nearly 2,000 Mahomedans.

DR. CORNISH, the retiring Surgeon-General of Madras, presided at the annual meeting of the Madras Christian College on the 24th ultimo. The Chief Justice paid an eloquent tribute to the long-continued efforts of Dr. and Mrs. Cornish in every good cause in Madras.

A LOCAL paper is glad to be able to state that Colonel Ross-Church has received the names of thirty gentlemen, members of the Madras Club, who are willing to serve as mounted volunteers. It has no doubt that dozens of other names will be forthcoming when it is understood that some one is registering names.

A NATIVE VOLUNTEER CORPS.—The members of the Triplicane Literary Society have resolved upon memorialising Government to form a Native Volunteer Corps, as the services of the regular troops are required in the Soudan and Afghanistan.

RAILWAY EXTENSION AT PALGHAT.—The Palghat station of the Madras Railway is now situated at Olakanode, about three miles from the town, and the inhabitants having represented to Government the inconveniences to which they are subject in consequence of this arrangement, the matter was inquired into by the railway authorities, and the company's directors have, after due consideration, accorded their sanction for the extension from Olakanode to Palghat town. The cost is estimated at two-and-a-half lakhs, towards which the Local Fund Board will make a contribution on account of a bridge. The final sanction of the Government of India is, of course, necessary; but in this matter, it is expected, there will be no hitch.—Times.

VOLUNTEER FORCES.—Colonel Pearse, Commandant of the local Volunteers, accompanied by Sergeant-Instructor Burton, of the 43rd Oxfordshire Light Infantry, left this morning en route to Mercara for the purpose of raising a volunteer corps in that city. We believe the planting community have expressed a desire not only to join themselves, but they have also promised to get their European and Eurasian employés to do so. Thus it is supposed it will be possible to get up a sufficient number to form three companies.—Bangalore Post.

AN ARTESIAN WELL IN MADRAS.—We have already recorded the fact that the local Government decided to experiment in sinking an artesian well in the People's Park near the Elephant Gate bridge. The necessary apparatus having arrived, the experiment was commenced yesterday evening, in the presence of Colonel W. H. Burton, R.E., Executive Engineer, Presidency Division, Captain Lindley, R.E., and Lieutenant Plummer, by Monsieur Cornot, the Civil Engineer in charge of the Pondicherry artesian wells. The boring was made to a depth of thirteen feet, and will be proceeded with, if necessary, to 300 feet depth; but judging from the nature of the strata the engineer in charge expects that the well will prove a success when it has been sunk a little more than 100 feet.—Mail, March 26.

THE MADRAS HIGH AND SMALL CAUSE COURTS.—Sir Charles Turner, the Chief Justice, and the Puisne Judges of the High Court have addressed a communication to Government, through their Registrar, Mr. J. Ackworth Davies, to recommend for the sanction of the Secretary of State for India the increase of the jurisdiction of the Presidency Small Cause Court Judges, so as to empower them to deal with all cases in which the subject matter is within Rs. 2,500. The Judges maintain that, owing to the Presidency Small Cause Court not having jurisdiction in testamentary and other suits, much of the time of the High Court Judges is taken up in the disposal of matters in which small sums of money are involved, and consequently there is always arrears of work on the file of the High Court. If the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court Judges should be increased, the High Court Judges say that reductions could be made in the High Court establishment, so as to provide means for the appointment of an additional Judge for the Small Cause Court, and if sanction was obtained for the proposed change, five judges will be sufficient for the High Court, and there will be no arrears of work. Notwithstanding the daily sitting of five judges, the Chief Justice says that it is impossible to get through the arrears. As the Presidency Small Cause Court Act is applicable to the presidencies of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, it is necessary to obtain the special sanction of the Secretary of State to extend the jurisdiction of the Madras Small Cause Court Judges as an exceptional measure. The reply of the Secretary of State is anxiously looked for, and the judges have asked that the reply be made known by telegram.—Times.

BOMBAY.

HIS HIGHNESS THE MAHARAJAH OF TRAVANCORE has subscribed Rs. 5,000 to the Lord Ripon Memorial Fund.

A SALUTE of seventeen guns was fired from the Saluting Battery at 5 P.M. on Friday, the 27th ult., to announce the temporary assumption by the Hon. J. B. Peile of the office of Governor of Bombay.

AN application has been made to Government by the Town Municipality of Sangamner for sanction to the raising of a loan of Rs. 10,000 at four-and-a-half per cent. on the security of the municipal revenues for the purpose of building a vegetable market in a central part of the town.

SURGEON D. ELCUM, who has been about three years in his Highness the Nizam's service, has resigned it for a more lucrative appointment in his own Presidency, namely, that of acting Secretary to the Surgeon-General with the Madras Government, vice Surgeon Arthur J. Sturmer, proceeding on furlough, who has performed the onerous duties since 13th April, 1880.

HIS Highness the Rao of Cutch has set apart a sum of Rs. 25,000, the interest accruing on it to be used for the benefit of his subjects in Bombay, in the way of scholarships, &c.; and a further sum of Rs. 10,000 to be placed in the hands of the Municipal Corporation, or any other institution that may be selected by the Government of Bombay, the interest accruing on the same to be used for the benefit of the inhabitants in general.

At the meeting of the Town Council on Monday, the 30th ult., it was unanimously resolved to approve of the Municipal Commissioner inviting tenders by public advertisement for a loan of not more than ten lakhs of rupees, repayable in forty years, with interest at 5 per cent. The tenders were to be sent in by Monday, the 20th April.

A PETITION was presented by several Hindus on Monday to the Municipal Commissioner, asking him to have the Vehar water turned on the same night at the close of the eclipse of the moon, as it was urgently needed for bathing and cooking purposes. The memorial pointed out that lately no water had been supplied during the night time, and that if their request was not complied with it would cause a great deal of inconvenience and discomfort to the Hindu community.

THE Bhandarees—dealers in toddy and toddy-spirit—of Bombay have forwarded a petition to the Viceroy, in which they state that in September last they presented a petition to Lord Ripon, the then Viceroy, setting forth the grievances under which they had been labouring. In reply they received a telegram from the Finance Office, Calcutta, stating that their memorial was still under consideration, while about a month later they were informed in a letter from the Revenue Department of the Bombay Government that the Government of India had intimated that they declined to interfere with the orders passed by the local Government on the subject of the taxation and sale of toddy-spirit in the town and island of Bombay. The memorialists draw attention to what they think is an inconsistency, and beseech his Excellency to reconsider their case, because ten thousand families of toddy drawers, who were hardly able to live from hand to mouth prior to the coming in force of the stringent arrangements, have been starving in consequence of their having been deprived of their means of subsistence.

THE NEW GOVERNOR.—Lord Reay, the new Governor of Bombay, arrived in Bombay on Monday morning by the mail steamer. His Excellency proceeded immediately to the Secretariat, where he was sworn in, and subsequently presented with an address from the Municipal Corporation. His Excellency the Governor and Lady Reay were to present the prizes to the Volunteers on Wednesday, the 8th inst. Much satisfaction will be caused to the members of the corps by this early manifestation of his Excellency's interest in it. The Governor of Bombay, who leaves for Mahabaleswar on the 11th, will hold his first levée in Bombay on Thursday, the 9th inst.

BURMA.

MR. WELLS, Comptroller of British Burma, gave over charge of his duties to Mr. Cowley on the 24th ult., and left for England on the following day by the s.s. Tenasserim.

MR. EGERTON ALLEN and Mr. R. McEwin, both on leave, are spoken of as likely to succeed to the Recordership of Rangoon in April, vice Mr. Agnew, promoted to the Calcutta High Court.

THE police have discovered two plots by pretender princes to attack the police guards to obtain weapons with which to arm rebels in Upper Burma. The Nagabo Prince has gone to the Shan States to incite rebellion there.

THE Irishmen of Rangoon celebrated St. Patrick's Day by a dinner, which was well attended. During the day the following telegram was sent by the Chairman of the dinner, Mr. W. Miller, to the Viceroy:—"Loyal Irishmen in Burma send greetings to your Excellency upon St. Patrick's Day," to which Lord Dufferin replied promptly:—"A thousand thanks. I return your good wishes with interest." Besides the usual loyal toasts the following were drunk:—"The Memory of St. Patrick;" "The Land of the Shamrock;" "Our Native Land." The Chairman, in proposing "The Land of the Shamrock," referred to the loyalty of Irishmen to the British Government. He said: "With an Irishman holding the chief command in Egypt—with an Irishman ruling over that great Empire in which for the present our fortunes are cast—with Irishmen in the van of every engagement in the Soudan—who can assert that our Queen has more loyal or devoted hearts than those that beat in Irish breasts? And I venture to prophesy, without fear of contradiction, that Irishmen will be found as lavish of their lives in the future in defence of England's Crown as ever they were in the Peninsula, the Crimea, or the great Indian Mutiny."

CEYLON.

(From the Ceylon Times.)

COLOMBO will shortly be visited by Sir John Coode, who is on his way to Western Australia. We shall welcome him as having given us an excellent harbour, but there is not the slightest occasion for the Breakwater Engineer to enter upon the question of any further expenditure on harbour works. The Colony is well satisfied with what Sir John and Mr. Kyle have given it, and wishes for no northern arm at present.

So far from the Special Commissioners of Inquiry into the Attorney-General's Department having finished their inquiries and being engaged in the preparation of a report, we now learn that information has come into their possession which may engage them in prosecuting further inquiries for some time longer. Witnesses are still being examined by them.

THE near approach of the date fixed for the completion of Mr. Nowell's contract and the opening of the line to Nanuoya has caused us to make inquiry as to the probability of the contractor being able to hand over to Government on that date. We find that great delay has been caused by official bungling. If the line is to be opened on the 20th of May, it can only be done by the contractor laying down his own sleepers, as the Government have none in stock!

THE conduct of our new General Railway Traffic Manager, Mr. Pearce, in proceeding against estate owners for allowing their coolies to use the main railway trace as a thoroughfare in default of any other, has called forth severe comments on all sides. The estates in question have no other outlet, and in one case the line of railway actually divides an estate in half, yet coolies are prosecuted for proceeding from one portion of the estate to the other. The magistrate before whom the case was heard inflicted a nominal fine of one cent on each defendant. We have since learnt that Government intend giving the estates in question a proper outlet; but for all that the conduct of Mr. Pearce must be regarded as arbitrary to a degree, and calculated to render him more unpopular than ever.

A SCHOOL OF SURVEY.—The staff of native surveyors in the Government Department of Survey has suffered so much decrease owing to promotion to other colonies, invaliding, and deaths, that it has been resolved by the Surveyor-General to institute a class of instruction composed of the most intelligent of the volunteers who may have attended the office for a certain period. This class will be placed under the care of Mr. O'Dowd, who, from his long experience in the department, is eminently qualified for the task. The class will at first consist of about half-a-dozen people, and these, after going through a certain course of preliminary office training, will be taken out at an early hour in the morning to acquire a practical acquaintance with field work under Mr. O'Dowd's personal supervision.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

KIRKE-MADE ammunition is evidently at a discount in the Madras Presidency, as the Commander-in-Chief has notified in orders that regiments may purchase it at one-quarter its original cost. This presents a fine opportunity for regimental rifle clubs to invest.

THE present is considered a fitting opportunity for the expansion of the Calcutta Naval Volunteer Artillery into two batteries. Why does Bombay not form a battery of Volunteer Naval Artillery or a company of Sub-Marine Engineers? There is ample material, if some person in authority would but take the initiative.

COLONEL A. T. REID, Bombay Staff Corps, has retired from the service. Colonel Reid saw considerable service in the Indian mutiny, and was present at the siege and capture of Kotah, and at the action of Kotah-ke-Serai. He also took part in the operations before the capture of Gwalior and Powrie and in the affairs at Bejapoor and Koondrye.

THE officers of the Military Accounts Department are likely to be much wanted just now. Two will be required with the force proceeding to Quetta, one is now in Egypt, and a second may be wanted at any moment to proceed there. Captain Renny, who has not yet proceeded on furlough out of India, will probably have his furlough cancelled for the present; and Lieutenant Melville, who is now in England and has been granted three months' extension of leave, will be recalled to duty.

MAJOR H. C. HAMILTON (Madras I.G.L.) having returned from Bangalore after a course of instruction, has assumed command of the 2nd H.C. Cavalry, vice Major Cummins, gone to the Soudan. This force is all astir, and watching with keen interest the drama that is now being enacted near Herat, so as to take part, by volunteering, in the probable war. A vacancy has been caused in the 1st Infantry by Surgeon Evans (Madras Establishment) taking up the duties of Inspector-General of Hospitals, Dispensaries, and Vaccination in H.H. the Nizam's Government.

Two Gardner guns—one five-barrel and one ten-barrel—have been despatched by steamer from Madras for Quetta. The 2,000 saddle trees which were being turned out at the Madras Gun Carriage Factory were completed last Saturday evening, and were at once despatched to the Arsenal to be forwarded on to Egypt. Dr. Roberts inspected the men of the Madras Gun Carriage corps on Monday morning, and passed about fifty of them, who have been directed to hold themselves in readiness to proceed at the shortest notice to Quetta. They consist of filers, fitters, armourers, and turners.

A NEW Order, bearing the date of March 21, 1885, has been issued reconstructing the Royal Artillery Commands in India. Under it Rs. 600 will be the allowance for the following commands: In the Bengal Army: Rawal Pindi, Lahore, and Meerut. In the Madras Army: Mysore and British Burmah. In the Bombay Army: Poona, Rs. 400 in the following:—In the Bengal Army: Sirhind, Oudh, Allahabad, Gwalior, and the Presidency District. In Madras: Hyderabad and the Eastern District. In Bombay: Mhow and the Aden Brigade. In the Bombay District colonels holding commands with allowances of Rs. 600 will only receive Royal Artillery Colonel's pay, but those Colonels holding commands previous to the issue of the above Order will receive Colonel's pay and command allowance of Rs. 400. Rs. 300 will be the allowance for the following commands:—In Bengal, Saugor only; in Madras, none; in Bombay, the Northern District, Sind, and Quetta. Rs. 200 will be the allowance for Campbellpore, Ferozepore, Agra, and Thayetmyo.

UNDER the same order, Adjutants will receive staff pay and horse allowance as at present, but will not be placed on the Battery establishment. The Inspector-General of Artillery and Deputy Adjutant-General will be Colonels. There will be two reserve Lieutenant-Colonels in Bengal; and the Assistant Adjutants-General of Madras and Bombay will be Lieutenant-Colonels.

OBITUARY.

GENERAL SAMUEL WELLS, C.B., died on the 8th inst. at his residence, Oak-villa, St. Mary's Church, Torquay, aged 77 years. He entered the Army in 1825, served at the recapture of Port Natal in 1842, and commanded the 1st Battalion of the 23rd Regiment in the Indian Mutiny campaign. He was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel in 1856, became colonel in 1860, major-general in 1868, lieutenant-general in 1877, and full general in 1882. The gallant general, who was nominated Companion of the Order of the Bath (Military Division) in 1858, married Ellen, daughter of Captain Thomas Williams, R.N.

MAJOR-GENERAL CHRISTOPHER PALMER RIGBY, F.R.G.S., late Her Majesty's Consul at Zanzibar, died on the 14th inst. at his residence in Portland-place, after a short illness, from an attack of congestion of the lungs. The deceased general entered the Bombay Army in 1836, and served at Aden in 1840 and two following years, being present during the repulse of two attempts by the Arabs to recapture it. In 1843 he was appointed an Assistant in the Deccan Revenue Survey and Assessment, and in 1847 was nominated Western Bheel Agent in Khandish, and also assistant magistrate. He was appointed to the post of president of the Military and Civil Examination Committee of the Presidency in 1854, and superintendent of bazaars and police and cantonment magistrate at Poona in 1856. In that year and the following he was employed on the staff during the Persian expedition and the subsequent occupation of the island of Karrack. He afterwards commanded the garrison of Bushire during the expedition to Borazjoon, and later on was appointed superintendent of bazaars with the field force, magistrate of Bushire, staff officer to the garrison, and Assistant Civil Commissioner of Bushire and Karrack. He was promoted to a captaincy in the 19th Bombay Native Infantry in 1850, became major in the Bombay Staff Corps in 1862, lieutenant-colonel in 1863, and retired with the rank of major-general in 1867. He was appointed Agent for the East India Company at Zanzibar in March, 1858, and Her Majesty's Consul there in December of the same year, but resigned in 1863.

CAPTAIN FRANCIS JOHN ROMILLY, R.E., who was attached to the company of Madras Sappers and Miners despatched to the Soudan, and who was killed in the recent fighting near Suakim, arrived in India on the 28th February, 1873, and at the commencement of the year was an executive engineer of the fourth grade B. Project Division, and was also in charge of the Coimbatore Division of the Madras Presidency.

MAJOR J. M. W. VON BEVERHOUDT, of the 17th Bengal I.N. (the Loyal Poorbeahs), who was killed in the recent fighting at Suakim, entered the army on the 8th March, 1864, and was wing commander in his regiment. He had apparently seen no active service prior to the operations in which he was killed.

LIEUTENANT A. T. F. EDWARDS, of the 28th Bombay N.I., who fell in the recent fighting near Soukim, joined the army on the 22nd January, 1881, and joined the regiment from the Royal Irish Regiment as officiating wing officer and quartermaster on probation on the 20th July, 1883.

LIEUTENANT E. M. B. NEWMAN, R.E., who was also killed near Suakim, only joined the army on the 26th July, 1881. He was appointed to the Sappers and Miners on the 4th August last year.

THE MAHARAJAH OF BURDWAN, whose death is announced from liver complaint, was one of the wealthiest and most considerable zemindars in Lower Bengal. The deceased's predecessor was a man well-known for his liberality and enlightenment. He was a member of the Viceroy's Council for three years from 1864, and was granted for life a salute of thirteen guns at the Imperial Assemblage at Delhi. His Highness presented a statue of the Queen-Empress to the Asiatic Society's Museum at Calcutta; and the ceremony of unveiling it was presided over with great pomp by Lord Lytton. The Maharaja died at Bhaugulpore on the 26th October, 1879, leaving the young man just deceased, who was an adopted son, to succeed him.

THE Allahabad paper remarks that there are still many officers who will bear with regret the death of Shaikh Sharf-ud-din, C.I.E., of Shikarpore, in the Budaon district. It is not six months since when, at a special durbar held in Bareilly, Sir Alfred Lyall invested the Shaikh with the insignia of the Order of the Indian Empire. He had not lived long to enjoy the honour which he had so well earned. On the outbreak of the Mutiny, when the sedition, which showed itself first in murder and rapine at Bareilly, spread as quick as news could travel and men could march to Budaon, Shaikh Sharf-ud-din, a man of position and influence, became at once conspicuous for his loyalty to the British cause. When Budaon was re-occupied by British troops, the Shaikh, who had never slackened in his fidelity, took charge for a time of the office of tehsildar till peace and order were fully re-established. His eminent services were recognised by a grant of confiscated villages and the conferment of a handsome khillat in public durbar. His subsequent services, though of a different kind, have scarcely been less in degree. For many years he has been the leading citizen of Budaon and the right-hand man of its district officers. He has taken a leading part in municipal administration, a pioneer of local self-government. As an honorary magistrate he has habitually done as much work as most of the officials, and has done it well. And he has so borne himself in high position as to enjoy to a rare degree the confidence of successive magistrates of Budaon and the esteem and good-will of his fellows. In Shaikh Sharf-ud-din the district has sustained a loss which will not easily be repaired, and Government has been deprived of a true and loyal subject.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 21, 1885.

INDIGNATION MEETING AT CALCUTTA.

JUST as we go to press we have received the following important telegram from Calcutta:—

The Tenancy Act has been condemned by a large and crowded meeting of the landholders of Bengal and Behar held here to-day. Great indignation and discontent is expressed at deep wrong done. A committee is appointed to memorialise the Secretary of State and both Houses of Parliament.—MAHARAJAH NARENDRA KRISHNA.

It is just as we feared. The passing of this iniquitous Act, so far from quieting the alarms which were caused by its introduction, has deeply exasperated all classes of the agricultural community of Bengal. The unhappy province will know no peace until this shameful source of irritation has been removed.

IS IT TO BE SURRENDER AGAIN?

DURING the last three days England has been commemorating, with extraordinary marks of affection, the statesman whose name is identified with the foreign policy known as "Peace with Honour." It is within the memory of the youngest politician how Lord Beaconsfield, notwithstanding the difficulties raised here at home by Mr. Gladstone over the "Bulgarian atrocities" agitation, succeeded in arresting the Cossack hordes at the moment when they were actually in the occupation of the very suburbs of Constantinople. That matchless feat, in the credit of which Lord Salisbury too shared, might well have taught the English people what may be accomplished by statesmanship when supported by dauntless courage and uncompromising patriotism. The "primrose" demonstrations of the past few days, which have been general throughout the land and especially notable in the metropolis, show that the nation is now fully alive to the value of those counsels which we so madly spurned in 1880. How, then, comes it about that at this very moment the whole civilised world is once more convulsed with laughter over the assured anticipation of England "backing down" again? The situation is in no way changed, except for the worse against us and our allies, since last week, when Mr. Gladstone was masquerading in the lion's skin; calling out the Reserves, buying cruisers in every direction, and generally attempting to pose as a second Beaconsfield. Since then, we have heard of the "administration" of Penjdeh, the chief bone of contention, by the Russians, and of various other acts of aggression. We have also heard—alas for the poor lion's skin, covering a heart that is anything but leonine!—of the natural reply of the Russians to our Gladstone's bluster; we have heard of the marching of Cossack troops, and the arming of Russian cruisers. And hey, presto!—the wand of Harlequin could not produce a more rapid transformation! Mr. Gladstone himself has not even spoken, as yet; and yet, all the world at home and abroad is agreed that the Prime Minister is already composing that magnificent oration in which he is going to prove to a delighted Radical party that it is good for us to turn the cheek to the smiter—that the White Feather, and not the Beaconsfield Primrose, is the fitting emblem of old England—and that as for our allies the Afghans, and our loyal fellow-subjects the Indians, they must learn that virtue is its own reward when dealing with a Grand Old Man.

Let us see how a few of our candid and sincere friends on the Continent, in yesterday's papers, regard the affair. And first, let us look at the opinions of Sir Charles Dilke's dear friends, the French journals, for whose favour Mr. Gladstone has sacrificed the friendship of Germany and Austria. The France is foremost in the bitterness of the comments suggested to it by what it considers our ready acceptance of national disgrace:—"England gives way! the castle of cards run up at Rawul Pindi has tumbled to pieces. Lord Dufferin telegraphs that Penjdeh is not worth powder and shot; in a few months they will say the same thing about Herat and the whole of Afghanistan. The day may possibly be not far distant when economists will demonstrate that the loss of India would be a blessing, since it would not interfere with British commerce, and, by handing over the country to the Russians, the expenses of the occupation would be saved, while the profits of the traders would continue undiminished."

The France is confident that before the end of the present century the English will have lost India, Canada, and Ireland, and that our country will have sunk below the level of Belgium. The Paris, "without wishing in any way to hurt the feelings of England, is compelled to note once more that she has retreated before the firm and energetic attitude of a Great European Power."

The Soleil congratulates England "on the good sense, practical spirit, and wisdom she has shown in this business." We tried to frighten Russia by bluster, but when we found that Russia refused to be frightened we quietly submitted to the inevitable, being well aware that to fight Russia single-handed would be to court disaster. The Paix predicts that the Ameer will go over to Russia, who can make her power felt by acts, and not merely by speeches and receptions.

The Débats speculates as to what course Turkey would pursue if war should take place after all. The Evénement considers that the reculade of England will do more for Russia than a dozen victories. The Moniteur explains that England has been compelled to yield, by acquiring the conviction that she would have to face a European coalition if she attempted to send her fleet into the Black Sea.

The Temps, which has discussed this peculiar question with signal ability, notices the rapid fluctuations of public opinion on the subject, and comes to the conclusion that the extremes of confidence and of despondency are equally unjustified. It holds that, in this matter of the Afghan frontier, England and Russia are precisely at the same points, both shrinking from a war, the risks of which they justly dread, but both of them seeking to uphold numerous political interests, and being especially anxious to save the appearance, in the eyes of the population of India and Central Asia, of having sustained a check. The République Française attributes the reculade of England to the fact that "Europe, represented by Germany, Austria-Hungary, and France, did not conceal its intention of intervening at Constantinople."

The Nord holds that the blow so deftly struck by General Komaroff is a matter for congratulation, since it has simplified matters.

And what do our German critics say? The Frankfurter Zeitung holds that England in making concessions to Russia without counter-concessions will incur the ridicule not only of the whole civilised world, but also of the Afghans, who will now certainly not hesitate to come to an open agreement with the Russians. According to the National Zeitung the sole good result of the Anglo-Russian conflict will be a thorough reform of the English fleet, which has been incredibly neglected for so long. The Cologne Gazette rightly observes that the pretended Russian renunciation of the Zulfikar Pass is in reality no concession whatever, as Russia, possessing Ak Tepe, Penjdeh, and Maruchaks, does not require the Zulfikar Pass for an advance to Herat.

Can we get any comfort from Austria? This is what the Vienna correspondent of the Standard telegraphs:—

The Norddeutsche says England has become old, decrepid, and fossilized, and is now of no more account than Holland. Bismarck, it is whispered, is so encouraged by the turn things have taken that he is going to trample on England's toes again in the matter of Colonial annexation. One paper here even questions the sanity of a Minister who has yielded as Mr. Gladstone has done to Russian perfidy, brutality, insult, and aggression. In short, it is impossible for Continental observers to understand England's utter want of resistance and the triumph she by her previous blustering has yielded to Russia.

Now, what does all this mean? Can we Englishmen, living here at home, offer any satisfactory explanation of the extraordinary phenomenon that is puzzling the world? In these columns we suggested one last week, even while the "hot fit" was still on the Ministry. We asked whether any, even the most temporary, reliance can be placed on the actions of a Cabinet that has been described by a colleague as one of "Jelly-fishes," and that is notoriously distracted by conflicting factions. And while the Government acts as a jelly-fish in its relations with the foes of England, here at home among ourselves it is fortified by the power of the Caucus, and becomes a veritable octopus, crushing our public opinion and stifling our national life.

Two women are on trial in the Satara district, Deccan, for arson. An astrologer told them that they would bear children if they set fire to seven houses, and they did so. According to our law the women are guilty and the astrologer is innocent.—Indian Witness.

AN IMPROVEMENT IN BALLOONING.—A German engineer is reported to have made an important discovery in aeronautics, by which he is enabled to condense or expand the gas in a balloon. The agent he employs is compressed carbonic acid, with the help of which he says he is able to ascend or descend at pleasure. This vertical movement would put it in the power of the aeronaut to go up or down until he finds a current of air moving in the horizontal direction he wishes. Should all this prove true, the discovery would be an important one for military operations, because in the time of war a balloon would be able to reach the enemy's territory and ascend or descend without requiring a fresh supply of gas.—Iron.

PRODUCE MARKETS.

INDIAN TEA.—Messrs. G. White and Co. report as follows on the Tea Market, from the 2nd to the 17th inst. :—Since our last report, dated the 2nd inst., the Easter holidays have intervened, and although there was a small sale on the 9th inst., no large quantity was brought forward until the 13th, when 7,000 packages were offered, and since that date the sales have continued to be heavy. Fine and Finest are in very short supply, and have realised high prices. Medium to fine with quality have been inquired for, and an advance of 1d. to 2d. has in some cases been established on these grades, it being most marked on broken Pekoes. For common to medium there has been also a better demand, and quotations are ½d. to 1d. higher since the holidays. The postponement of the announcement of the Budget from the 16th to the 23rd inst. appears to have added a fresh stimulus to the duty payments, which continue on a very heavy scale, and this, coupled with the exceptionally favourable statistical position of Indian Tea, is encouraging buyers to operate, as the amount in first hands is now reduced to a very small compass. Ceylon.—There has been a rather large and, on the whole, useful assortment brought to sale, and prices for all desirable kinds are firmer at 1d. per lb. advance.

THE following are the annual reliefs for the Madras Presidency for the year 1885-86:—Royal Horse Artillery—D-B, Kirkee to Bangalore; E-B, Bangalore to Secunderabad; M-B, Secunderabad to Kirkee. Royal Artillery—R-1st, Bellary to Bangalore; S-1st, Bangalore to Bellary; 6-1st, S.I.D., Thayetmyo to England; 1st Bn. O.L.I., Quetta and Bangalore to England; one battalion, England to Bangalore. Madras Cavalry—1st Regiment, Bangalore to Kamptee; 2nd, Bellary to Bangalore; 3rd, Secunderabad to Bellary; 4th, Kamptee to Secunderabad. Madras Infantry—3rd Regiment, Tounghoo to Cannanore; 6th, Quilon to Secunderabad; 19th, Cannanore to Bellary; 21st, Trichinopoly to Tounghoo; 22nd, Madras to Cuttack; 24th, Secunderabad to Mangalore; 25th, Bellary to Madras; 31st, Secunderabad to Quilon; 32nd, Cuttack to Secunderabad; 33rd, Mangalore to Trichinopoly.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 28, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, April 10th; Madras and Allahabad, April 8th; Bengal, April 7th.

The reception given last night in Parliament to Mr. Gladstone's demand for a Vote of Credit of eleven millions, the whole to be applied, if necessary, to the defence of the Empire against Russian aggression, will be enthusiastically applauded by every patriotic subject of Her Majesty. In the presence of that aggression every discordant voice is hushed. For the moment we know nothing of differences of political opinion, of class, of creed, or of nationality. There are no longer among us Whigs or Tories—Englishmen, Colonists, or Indians—Christians, Hindus, or Muhammadans. We all feel ourselves to be now simply "citizens of no mean city," patriots of the glorious British Empire, loyal subjects of one beloved Sovereign, determined to stand shoulder to shoulder to resist the foe.

The splendid example of the Maharajah of Darbhanga, in placing his wealth at the disposal of Government for the defence of the Empire, has been very widely followed in India; and The Times this morning, commenting on the patriotic offers of the Nawab Ahsanullah of Dacca, the Nawab of Murshidabad and the Maharajah of Tipperah, justly observes that "if loyalty is to be measured by personal sacrifice, the Queen has few such subjects in England." We heartily concur, and are truly rejoiced to be able to chronicle such manifestations of loyalty, so entirely worthy of the warm-hearted nobles of India, and so calculated to draw closer together the two great races of Her Majesty's subjects, English and Indian.

THE happy significance of these offers should be even more deeply impressed on the minds of the people and Government of England by the fact that these very princes and nobles are, at this very moment, the victims of a serious error of judgment on the part of the Government, and that, nevertheless, at such a critical moment as this, they have not allowed their personal or class grievances to weigh even as the dust in the balance. But surely the generous statesmanlike instincts of Lord Kimberley and Lord Dufferin will now say that such men as these ought not to be subjected to the injury and the humiliation of such an oppressive measure as the Bengal Tenancy Act? It is a curious and striking fact that there are few, if any, princes or nobles who will suffer more, both in pocket and in prestige, from the unjust operation of that unhappy law if it be permitted to take effect, than the Maharajah of Darbhanga, the Nawab Ahsanullah of Dacca, and the representative of the illustrious Nizamat family of Murshidabad. At a meeting in Kensington last night, Mr. Roper Lethbridge dwelt on this fact, and the conclusion he drew—that it would be an opportune and gracious act on the part of Lord Kimberley and Lord Dufferin at this moment to withdraw the measure—was warmly and unanimously applauded.

No praise is too high for the courage and energy of Lord Dufferin in contending with the difficulties imposed on him by the unfortunate abandonment of the Quetta Railway. He is "hurrying up animals and stores" in spite of these disadvantages, and though, in consequence of past errors, we cannot hope to forestall the Russians at Herat, the declaration of war will doubtless be speedily followed by the Amir's assent to the occupation of Kandahar and Girishk by our forces.

WE are glad to see that the demand for tickets for the lecture of our distinguished visitor, M. Arminius Vambéry, at the Society of Arts next Friday is so great that the meeting will be held in Exeter Hall instead of at the Rooms of the Society. The eloquent words of the great Hungarian at Sheffield last night, when he implored us Englishmen not to "give over our noble heritage to the barbarous Russians," but to be manly and resolute in its defence, will surely go to the very heart of the nation.

A VERY apt illustration of M. Vambéry's stirring words may be found in the language in which Mr. H. G. Keene, C.I.E., the latest and one of the most interesting and painstaking historians of India, tells us how our Empire in India was won by such men as Lord Wellesley and his immortal brother Arthur. Mr. Keene has this week published (Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co.) the matured result of years of laborious research, in his "Sketch or the History of Hindustan, from the First Muslim Conquest to the Fall of the Mughol Empire." We shall take an early opportunity of reviewing this most important and valuable work at length; but we refer to it in this place, in order to draw attention to some of the words of the concluding chapter. The period referred to, as indicated in Mr. Keene's title, was that of the fall of the Empire of Delhi; and at the beginning of the concluding chapter, it was still uncertain whether the English power, or the French adventurers represented by such men as Perron, would succeed to the Imperial heritage. "The suspicion," says Mr. Keene, "if not the fear, of the French was strong upon Wellesley; and his Indian policy was part of that far-seeing and resolute vigilance which characterised the British statesmen of those days." The distinction here wisely drawn by Mr. Keene between the "suspicion" and the "fear" of foreign aggression may well be commended to the study of those who accused Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Lytton of "Russophobia"—if any there be whose Radicalism is so robust as still to survive the shocks of recent events.

At page 449, Mr. Keene describes the schemes of the French—"but," he adds, "the British were too resolute and active for these plans to succeed." Here we get the key-note, which we would commend to Mr. Gladstone at the present moment.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN AND Co. will issue in a few days a second edition of Mr. Charles Marvin's work, "Grodokoff's Ride to Herat."

MR. CHARLES MARVIN's pamphlet "Shall Russia have Penjdeh?" is being translated into Russian, German, and French. The Russian edition will appear next week.

THE Times of India has the following obituary till the departure of the mail, April 10th:—

Brigadier-General A. H. Murray, R.A., Commanding the Saugor district.

As officers in the Corps of Guides are liable to be called on to serve in the cavalry or infantry of the regiment, according to circumstances, all officers of the corps will be treated as cavalry officers, and allowed to select charges from the Government depôts.

A SUFFICIENT number of persons have been added to the Madras Volunteer Artillery to form a second battery. The necessary sanction from Government for the formation of another battery has been applied for by Major Branson.

THE Commander-in-Chief in India and army headquarters will, according to present arrangements, leave Rawul Pindee for Simla on the 16th or 17th inst. Sir Frederick Roberts with his staff will probably start down country at the same time.

THE following order is published:—The Allahabad Division is about to lose one of its highest officers who has commanded the artillery of the division for the last four years, and, in bidding Colonel Stokes farewell, Sir Herbert Macpherson begs to offer him his best thanks for the cordial assistance and support invariably given.

UNDER the orders of Government a committee, consisting of the following officers, assembled at Madras, on the 2nd instant, for the purpose of suggesting what measures are necessary for the better fortification of Fort Saint George:—Brigadier-General A. C. Johnson, C.B., Commanding the Eastern District; Colonel Prendergast, R.E., Superintending Engineer; Colonel W. H. Burton, R.E., Executive Engineer of the Presidency Circle; and Lieutenant-Colonel S. E. Atkinson, Deputy Assistant Quarter-master-General.

Telegraphic Intelligence.

The following is from the correspondent of the Standard at Bombay, dated April 23 :—

"The Papal Decree abolishing the ecclesiastical patronage of the King of Portugal in seven Vicariates Apostolic in India is to take effect on the 1st of June.

"A further Decree is expected abolishing the Padroado (Primacy of Goa) over the remainder of British India."

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent at Calcutta, dated April 26 :—

"The Duke and Duchess of Connaught left Simla yesterday en route for England, but possibly a telegram from home may alter their plans, in which case they may return to Simla. It is stated that this probable change in the Duke's plans has no political significance whatever.

"The telegrams received from home at the beginning of last week seemed to point to a peaceful arrangement of the Afghan boundary question, with the cession of Penjdeh as one of its principal features. The news caused a general feeling of dissatisfaction in India, it being felt that a peace concluded on such a basis would be humiliating, and could not be lasting. The possession of the Zulficar and Maruchak boundary line would enable Russia to threaten Herat and Maimana at will, it would put Afghan Turkestan practically at her mercy, and give her the opportunity of establishing her influence over the Hazara tribe. The concession might purchase one year's peace, but the result would probably be that twelve months hence we should feel the same anxiety for the safety of Candahar, Cabul, Ghuzni, and Jellalabad which we are now feeling for Herat. Therefore the news that another hitch had occurred in the negotiations was felt to be rather a relief than otherwise, and hopes are again entertained that the Ministry will positively insist upon Russia accepting a boundary which will give India and Afghanistan a reasonable prospect of security.

"All the accounts which reach us from the Boundary Commission tend to show that General Komaroff was clearly the aggressor in the Penjdeh affair, and that he and General Alikhanoff had been long trying to provoke the Afghans. Indeed, the Pioneer newspaper asserts on good authority that General Alikhanoff, writing to Sir Peter Lumsden and Colonel Ridgeway, openly challenged the Commission to fight.

"Whatever be the state of mind of the Ministry the Indian Government continues to push on the preparations quietly but energetically. Large numbers of ponies, mules, and carts are being purchased throughout the country, and sent to Quetta and Pishin. Quantities of stores are also in course of transport every day. This fact proves more clearly how enormous would have been the saving of time, money, and efficiency but for the abandonment four years ago of the Candahar railway. It was a piece of party spite for which the country is now paying a heavy penalty. However, no effort is being spared to hurry on animals and stores as rapidly as possible, and when the further railway works, now being commenced, are completed transport will be greatly facilitated.

"The 1st Army Corps is expected to begin the movement towards Pishin shortly, and the various corps will, it is said, be despatched in the following order:—1st Battalion Oxford Light Infantry, 2nd Manchester Regiment, 4th Rifle Brigade, 1st Irish Fusiliers, 1st King's Borderers, 4th King's Rifle Corps, 2nd Derbyshire Regiment, 1st Yorkshire Regiment, 2nd Scottish Rifles, 1st Welsh Fusiliers, 1st Royal Warwickshire Regiment, 2nd Hampshire Regiment. Batteries of artillery will accompany the force at convenient intervals.

"The further destination of this force in the event of war is unknown. The Ameer at Rawul Pindi expressed confidence that he would be able to hold his own against Russia; but his confidence is not generally shared, and unless England paralyzes the Russian attack on Afghanistan by operations in other quarters, it is probable that a declaration of war will be speedily followed by the movement of the 1st Army Corps across the frontier.

"The recent passage of the Ameer and his retinue, laden with valuable property, through the Khyber Pass has drawn attention to the excellence of the arrangements for security of transit through the pass, the initiation and maintenance of which is mainly due to Major Warburton, Political Officer in charge. The Indian Government pays nearly two lakhs of rupees annually to the tribes responsible for the safety of the pass. Of this over 80,000 rupees are disbursed as pay to contingents of various tribes, numbering 640 men, who garrison the several points of vantage. Two caravans pass weekly through the Khyber Pass; and the annual transit duty taken by the Ameer amounts to about 170,000 rupees. On our side we take about 80,000 yearly. Caravans sometimes bring property of great value. One recently carried to Bokhara silk valued at 15 lakhs. Only once since the present arrangements came into force, some three years ago, has there been any attempt at looting, and that was unsuccessful. The guards acted loyally and killed several of their fellow-hillmen.

But for present arrangements the Ameer would have had to pay heavy blackmail to the tribes to insure safe transit.

"The Indian newspapers give an account of a review of his entire regular army held by Holkar on Wednesday. Four cavalry regiments, four infantry regiments, and four batteries of artillery paraded, and made a fine show. The artillery were splendidly horsed. The Maharajah made a short speech to the troops, declaring his loyalty to the Queen and his determination to serve devotedly the supreme power to which he owed everything.

"A large number of officers who had been ordered back from furlough arrived last mail, and proceeded to their various stations. There is some prospect of the privilege of short leave being reopened on the condition that officers do not go beyond the reach of the telegraph, or over 72 hours' journey from their regiments."

"Sir Auckland Colvin is now engaged in carefully reviewing the financial position for the purpose of meeting the deficit, which is now certain. The estimated cost of the war preparations, including the Sibi railway, is three and a-half millions—a sum which will doubtless be largely exceeded should war break out. This extraordinary expenditure will be met by strictly economising in the revenue charges and by retrenchment where it is possible, without, it is believed, trenching on capital outlay. Under the head of extraordinary public works no new loan is at present contemplated other than that referred to in the Budget, nor any new taxation, at least this year. The statement which has been going the round of the local Press that funds to meet the Sibi railway extension will be supplied by stoppage of other railway projects is incorrect.

"The out-turn of Benares opium is much greater than last year.

"An influential meeting was held at Hyderabad on Thursday for the purpose of adopting measures to establish a Mahomedan college. The Nizam, Salar Jung, and the Resident were present. The Nizam made a long speech on the advantages of knowledge, and attributed the present low state of Mahomedans to the neglect of education. He subscribed three lakhs of rupees to the project, besides promising a subsidy of 500 rupees monthly. Salar Jung subscribed 50,000, and a donation of 100 rupees monthly. Other persons also contributed liberally.

"Lord William Beresford, military secretary to the Viceroy, proceeds home by next mail. He has been a prominent figure at Government House for the last ten years; and under four successive Viceroys his courtesy and geniality have made him universally popular, and he will be much missed. Colonel Fergus Graham succeeds him."

"The local papers state that one lakh of rupees is being expended on the defences of Rangoon. All the available steam launches are being fitted for torpedo purposes, and guns are being mounted."

"It is asserted that the French Government have purchased over 600 ponies in Burmah for Tonquin."

We hear that Messrs. Dean and Son, the well-known juvenile publishers, intend issuing a weekly paper printed in chromo lithography. This will be the first coloured picture paper ever issued.

INTERNATIONAL INVENTIONS EXHIBITION.—Messrs. Spiers and Pond, the refreshment contractors to the Inventions Exhibition, are having a complete factory for the manufacture of mineral waters fitted up in the exhibition grounds (Queen's-gate entrance). It may be interesting to our readers to know that it is intended to throw open the factory for inspection to those interested in the process of bottling, &c. The form of bottle that is to be exclusively used is that known as Foster's patent screw-stoppered bottle, which gained the gold medal at the "Heatheries." The entire machinery and accessories are being supplied and fitted up by Messrs. Barnett and Foster, London, N., the celebrated engineers in this branch of business, whose latest addition to their already long list of awards is three gold and four other medals at the late Health Exhibition, awarded in competition with other leading firms. We trust that Messrs. Spiers and Pond will set an example to the great drinks trade and retail their mineral waters at such a price as will bring them within the reach of all classes. If the use of refreshing non-intoxicating drinks is to be encouraged and increased (and why not?) the price must be such that no reason can be given for the purchase of intoxicants in preference. Why a bottle of soda water should cost the consumer twice as much as a glass of Bass's ale, which costs considerably more in the first place, we are at a loss to know; and we think hotel proprietors, chemists, and others who have the retailing of these drinks, are acting against their own interests in handicapping the business as they do. We are quite certain if these drinks could be purchased over the counter at a fair and reasonable profit only, the demand would be greatly in excess of what it is at the present time, and the retailer would thus more than recoup himself for the diminished profit.

Home News.

COLONEL T. PRENDERGAST WALSH, late Cantonment Magistrate of Ahmednagar, has been elected president of the newly-formed Ealing Conservative Club, the inaugural banquet of which will take place on Tuesday, the 5th of May.

TRADE WITH SOUTH-WEST CHINA AND THE SHAN STATES.—Mr. Holt S. Hallett delivered an address to the Manchester Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday, the 21st inst., on his recent surveys and explorations in the Shan States bearing upon trade with Western China, with the object of enlisting support for the scheme of a railway between British Burmah and South-West China. He urged that the question was of the highest importance to Lancashire and all industrial centres. Manchester was at the head of the piece-goods trade, and might hope for a great extension of demand through the opening out of railway communication. The president of the Chamber, Mr. Hutton, gave a hearty support to the scheme, which, he said, was likely to develop one of our largest markets. The guarantee of £45,000 per annum asked for from the Indian Government was only a trifle compared with the revenue obtained from British Burma, and would probably only be required during the construction of the line. A resolution was passed declaring that the scheme was opening up railway communication through Siam and the Shan States to South-West China was deserving of the prompt and hearty support of the Chamber.

THE INDIAN INSTITUTE AT OXFORD.—The Indian Institute at Oxford has now been thrown fully open, and the event was celebrated last week by a conversazione, at which Lord Ripon, Sir T. Brassey, Sir E. Colebrook, and many heads of houses were present. It will be remembered that the corner-stone of the building was laid by the Prince of Wales last autumn, and his Royal Highness still takes a lively interest in its progress, as was evinced by his sending off a telegram of congratulation in the midst of his Irish engagements. Professor Monier Williams gave a short address, explaining the objects of the institution, which are, broadly speaking, to promote knowledge and interest about India.—Home News.

ASSAM TEA.—It is generally understood that among the new means of taxation to which the Government will be forced to resort will be an impost upon tea. In consequence of this, great quantities of tea are hurriedly being got out of bond at home, and no doubt planters will get over any stocks held in India as fast as possible.—Id.

At a meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society, on the 20th inst., Sir Thomas Wade, K.C.B., in the chair, the Rev. Professor Beal contributed a paper on "The Age and Writings of Nāgārjuna Boddhisattva" (from the Chinese). Mr. George Henderson, jun., was elected a resident member, and Messrs. G. W. Rusden and Willoughby Dumergne, Madras C.S., non-resident members.

NOTICES, MEETINGS, DIVIDENDS.

INDO-EUROPEAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—A general meeting of the shareholders will be held at the Cannon-street Hotel on Thursday next, April 30th, at noon.

EASTERN EXTENSION, AUSTRALASIA, AND CHINA TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—According to the report issued the gross revenue for the half-year ending December 31st, including Government subsidies, came to £248,088 against £231,056. The available balance, including £17,141 brought forward, is £141,377, against which the directors have charged £20,000 on account of the partial renewal of the Singapore, Saigon, and Penang-Rangoon cables. A quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent. has been paid, and it is now proposed to make a further similar distribution, together with a bonus of 2s. per share, making a total of 7 per cent. for the whole year. The balance of £33,877 has been carried to the general reserve fund, which now stands at £510,649.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA (LIMITED).—The annual meeting of the shareholders was held on Wednesday last at the City Terminus Hotel, Mr. R. O. Campbell presiding. In moving the adoption of the report the chairman said that the profit had exceeded that of any previous year, and, after the strictest examination, he ventured to assure them that never in the history of the bank had it been in a better position. Indian Government securities had been affected by the depreciation in the silver currency, and those held by the bank had been taken at their market value on December 31. After providing for bad and doubtful debts their gross profits last year had been 21 per cent. on their capital, while their net profits had been close upon 15 per cent. On December 31, 1883, their reserve fund amounted to £5,000, which was increased to £30,000 on June 30 last, and they now proposed to add another £10,000 to it, making it £40,000. After paying the dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum (making the distribution for the whole year 5 per cent.), and transferring the amount mentioned to the reserve fund they would carry forward £12,185. Mr. John Borradaile seconded the motion, which was carried, the retiring directors and auditors being afterwards re-elected.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, &C.—The 27th annual general meeting of the shareholders was held on Tuesday, April 21st, at the offices, Old Broad-street. Mr. J. N. Bullen presided, and, in moving the adoption of the report, observed that the past half-year had not been so favourable as its immediate predecessor for Eastern banking operations. The position had been further aggravated by the state of the money market. In ordinary circumstances, the value of money abroad was a good deal over the value of money in London for the time being. For instance, while the Bank rate here was now 3½ per cent. and money outside was somewhat less, the minimum Bank rate in Calcutta was 8 per cent.; but during November and December last, while the Bank rate here was 5 per cent., so great was the abundance of money, owing to the dulness of the trade in Bombay and Calcutta that the Bank rate there was 3 per cent., and money could not always be employed even at that rate. The net profits, after providing for bad and doubtful debts, and writing down their Rupee Paper at the end of the year to the then market value, had been £31,432. For the whole year their net profits had been £99,116, or rather over 13 per cent. on their capital, taking it at its par value of £750,000. Out of that amount they had paid a dividend of 5 per cent. and added £60,000 to the reserve fund, which now stood at £110,000. The uncertainties of the future of silver were necessarily a source of anxiety, but they were doing what they could to provide for contingencies arising out of this state of things by making these additions to their reserve fund. They would continue that course, not paying a larger dividend than five per cent., until the depreciation of their capital had been fully provided for, and they had also accumulated a further sum against the ordinary business of the bank. Their deposits and note circulation, which had somewhat diminished, owing to the distrust engendered in the East by the bank failures last year, had somewhat recovered. Their holdings in Rupee Paper had been further reduced in the half-year, and had been written down to the market value at the 31st of December. Although there was now much less depression in the markets for Eastern produce generally, and in some articles an important recovery had taken place, it could not be said that Eastern trade was satisfactory, and, therefore, great caution was necessary in the conduct of the business. The conclusion of peace between France and China had removed a source of anxiety and possible danger, and now that the war was over, it might be hoped that one result would be to open up China to foreign trade to a greater extent than hitherto. If China were opened up and her mineral and other resources developed, it could not be doubted that an enormous increase of trade would ensue. As to our relations with Russia, it must, he was sure, be the wish of all of them that an honourable settlement of the existing differences might be arrived at without recourse to war; but deplorable as war would be, there was one thing which would be much more calamitous—a settlement that would surrender to Russia anything that was essential to the safety and interests of India. A peace purchased on these terms would not be a peace—it would be simply an armed truce, certain to be broken at a moment most inopportune to ourselves, when we were entangled in difficulties in other directions. The unrest which would result from the presence so near our frontier of a vast military Power like Russia would put a stop to all enterprise in India, and, he might add further, put a stop to that extraordinary material and moral progress which had been witnessed in India during the past few years. As to the commercial results of a war with Russia, perhaps compensation might be found for the state of things such as would then arise. On the previous occasion, when we were at war with that Power, there was an extraordinary development of India's capacity for supplying us with articles previously taken from Russia. Another result of war might be to give stability to the silver market. An enormous demand for silver would arise in India. The Council would be obliged to curtail its drawings, and the result probably would be that there would be an important advance in exchange, which would help Rupee Paper, and in various ways assist those values which depended upon silver. Mr. J. Murray Robertson seconded the motion. In answer to questions, the Chairman said it had been the policy of the directors for some time to reduce the banks' holding of Rupee Paper as far as possible without too great a sacrifice. He did not think they ought at the present moment to force the market unduly. With regard to the value of their shares, all he could say was that, so far as they could see, the shares were unduly depressed in the market. At the present rate of 1s. 7d., the loss would be £156,000, or £40,000 more than they had provided for. No doubt Eastern banks did make bad debts, and he feared they were inherent under the conditions in which trade was now carried on. The directors, however, exercised the greatest possible supervision. He thought it would be advantageous not to set out in their accounts the amount of the bad debts, but simply show the net profits after providing for the bad debts—a suggestion, the advisability of which was afterwards endorsed by Mr. F. Tendron, one of the auditors. The motion was unanimously adopted; and resolutions were afterwards passed re-electing the retiring directors and auditors, appointing to a seat at the board Mr. Thomas Scott, who was recently a director, and providing that in the future the accounts presented to the directors should show the net profits only, without stating the gross profits or the amount of bad and doubtful debts, this resolution being declared carried by eighteen to seven.

OBITUARY.

GENERAL HENRY MACAN, C.B., colonel of the 17th Regiment Bombay Native Infantry, died on Monday, the 20th inst., in the 81st year of his age. He entered the Bombay army in 1821, became captain in 1834, and served on the personal staff of the general officer commanding the Scinde Field Force, and also as assistant adjutant-general in the Scinde and Afghanistan campaigns of 1840-41. He was promoted to the rank of major in 1841, became lieutenant-colonel in 1846, and colonel in 1854. The gallant officer commanded the 1st Brigade at the siege and in the assault and capture of Kotah in March, 1858, for which service he received the medal, and he was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (military division) in 1861. He attained the rank of major-general in 1859, was promoted to lieutenant-general in 1870, and became a general in 1877.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HARROVIANA.*

All old Harrovians will be glad of a record of the famous school where their early days were spent; but Mr. Percy Thornton's researches and recollections will be found interesting to many others. It is not generally known that there was a school at Harrow prior to the foundation of the great school by John Lyon. Mr. Thornton also shows the probability of Harrow being the school referred to in Love's Labour Lost, when Don Adriano de Armado says, "Do we not educate youth at the charge-house on the top of the mountain? Or mons, the hill." For the argument that charge is a corruption for church-house, as the school was anciently close to the church or even in the churchyard, we must refer the reader to Mr. Thornton's book. But the supposition seems fairly grounded, as in that case the same school is again referred to in Twelfth Night—"Like a pedant that keeps a school in the church," and Shakespeare's intimacy with Dr. Caius, who was a man of importance in the neighbourhood at the time, is shown in the Merry Wives of Windsor. The ups-and-downs that the school passed through in the interval from Shakespeare's time to our own are curious and interesting. But throughout the principle of the school has been kept up, and the popular spirit is shown in the story of the small Harrow boy, who talking of F. C. Cobden (then in the Harrow eleven), was asked by his parents what relationship his hero claimed to the great Cobden? The lad indignantly replied, "He is the great Cobden."

But Harrow has turned out many men of great fame, besides good cricketers. Sir Robert Peel, Lord Byron, and Lord Palmerston retained their love for their old school throughout life, and there are many other minor stars. Among those of late years are Melville, who died protecting the colours of his regiment at Isandlwana, Viscount St. Vincent, and the well-known Colonel Fred. Burnaby, who fell facing the foe to the last in the Soudan. When we bring up the rising generation with such traditions and examples, we have every reason to trust that the future will grant us as great a supply of leaders of men in all capacities as the past.

† A PRELIMINARY meeting of ex-officers of the Volunteers was held at Calcutta on the 1st inst., under the auspices of Major Sterndale, retired list, for the formation of a volunteer reserve for Calcutta and the suburbs. It is expected that at least 500 men will enrol themselves. Fifty have already given in their names to serve, and every effort is being made to secure the assistance of large firms for furthering the object in view, viz., the organisation for defensive purposes of all Europeans and Eurasians who have served for three years in the regular army, the militia, or volunteers. The movement has the cordial sympathy and earnest support of General Wilkinson, commanding the Presidency District. The force will be officered by gentlemen who have retired from the active list of the regular army and volunteers.

BENGAL, UPPER INDIA, &c.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal left Calcutta on Tuesday, the 7th inst., for Darjeeling.

A MAN named Sullivan, a member of the Punjab Volunteer Rifles, whilst under the influence of drink, stabbed a native a few days since with his bayonet. The injured man lies in a precarious condition.

LARGE numbers of natives are coming forward offering their services as volunteers. In Calcutta four hundred native gentlemen, principally professional men, have given in their names as volunteers, if Government will allow them to form a corps.

THE biggest retaining fee probably ever received by a barrister is the one recently paid to Mr. Evans, of the Calcutta bar, to proceed to Hyderabad in the ensuing big sensational case at the Deccan Court—one lakh and a-half of rupees.

THERE is, a contemporary believes, some chance of an attempt being made to establish an Eurasian colony in Bengal. The local Government is favourably inclined towards the proposal, and it is probable that a piece of land in the direction of Darjeeling will be granted for the purpose.

REWARD OF GALLANTRY.—Mr. Allan Macleod, a pupil of the St. George's College, Mussoorie, has been offered a commission in the Army, in recognition of his gallantry at Roorkee recently, when he saved a soldier of the Royal Artillery from drowning in the Ganges Canal.

A CENSUS is to be taken at Simla during the season now commencing, which is expected to show a considerable increase of population over that of 1878.

ON Mr. Bazett Colvin's retirement from the service, on the 10th inst., Mr. C. A. Daniell will become senior member of the Board of Revenue in the North-West Provinces, and the Hon. Mr. Quinton will be appointed second member. Mr. Quinton is at present on privilege leave, and during his absence Mr. J. C. Robertson will officiate on the Board.

A FINE bag of big game has been made this year by the Maharajah of Kuch Behar and his party. The record of the fortnight's shooting stands thus: Ten tigers, three bears, one panther, six rhinoceros, fourteen buffaloes, and twenty-three deer of kinds. There was quality as well as number, several of the rhino and buffalo horns being amongst the finest ever seen in Kuch Behar.

MADRAS.

PROPOSED PATRIOTIC FUND.—A proposal has been made for the formation of a patriotic fund, to which wealthy Native Chiefs not able to send troops could subscribe.

THE Eurasian Colony at Whitefield is increasing in popularity. So many persons have lately settled there that, although a number of houses are in course of erection, there is not sufficient accommodation for all the arrivals, and a number of persons have been accommodated in the school until the new buildings are finished.

THE prospects of the Mysore Gold Mining Company still continue to improve. Up to the end of February the mine had yielded 1,616 ounces of gold, valued at about £6,200, and since then the quartz which has been operated on has yielded an average assay of over six ounces per ton.

BRITISH RELICS AT GURRAMKONDA.—At Gurramkonda, in the Vayalpad taluk, Cuddapah, three graves were recently discovered by the Executive Engineer of the district. These seem to have been the graves of Europeans supposed to have been killed when the fort was taken by the English in A.D. 1792. As the Government agrees with the Collector in thinking them worthy of being preserved, the requisite funds for their preservation have been granted.

THERE has been so much dissatisfaction expressed by the public at the reticence which has been maintained by those in authority at Suakin, respecting the disaster on the 22nd ultimo, in which the Madras Sappers suffered severely, that his Excellency the Governor of Madras has obtained the following reply to an inquiry that he made on the subject:—"Madras Sappers, Captain Romilly and Lieutenant Newman killed, Captain Wilkieson wounded, fifteen men killed, eight men wounded." Even yet the names of the Sappers killed have not been telegraphed.

ENROLMENT OF NATIVES IN THE VOLUNTEER ARTILLERY.—Major Spring Branson has been consulted as to the grounds of Colonel Ross-Church's objection to the enrolment of natives in the Madras Volunteer Artillery. It appears that Colonel Ross-Church believed that (1) there was an order of Government against the enrolment of natives; (2) that such enrolment would lead to future complications; (3) that the natives would not adopt the uniform. Major Branson was not aware that Government were opposed to the matter, and as regards future complications he had nothing to say, as Colonel Ross-Church had not particularised what the complications would be. Then, as to the adoption of the uniform, the native gentlemen had been already measured for and had tried on their uniforms. Colonel Ross-Church also believed that the present volunteers would object to the enrolment of natives, but, as a matter of fact, the members of the Madras Volunteer Artillery did not object at all.—Times.

The Maharajah of Mysore has placed not only the forces but the resources of his State at the disposal of the Government of India in the present crisis. Thus while his Highness's troops, and more particularly the cavalry, are being mustered and equipped at Bangalore with an eye to active service, the valuable bullocks of the country, the same good breed of animals with which Wellington and Harris campaigned, are being collected in numbers for the use of the British transport. The Nepalese Durbar has also made a general offer of assistance to the British Government in case of need, couched in the most friendly and cordial terms. The offer was telegraphed to the Queen, and a reply has been received directing the Viceroy to convey to Maharajah Adhiraj Her Majesty's acknowledgments and appreciation.

BOMBAY.

CAPTAIN T. HOPE, Political Agent in Khelat, is granted furlough to Europe for one year and forty-six days on private affairs.

THE HON. J. B. PEILE left for Poona on Saturday, the 4th inst. A salute of seventeen guns was fired from the Saluting Battery on the occasion.

HIS HIGHNESS the Maharajah Holkar returned to Mhow from Allahabad on Friday, the 3rd inst. He appeared tired and not in excellent health.

MR. T. YORKE SMITH, Registrar of the Diocese, is granted leave for eight months from date of departure in April, and Mr. A. V. Frere is appointed to officiate during his absence.

THE Governor and Lady Reay was to leave Bombay for Mahabaleshwar on the 10th inst., but stop one night at Poona, so as to see their residence at Gunesh Khind.

THE designation of the Chief Engineer for Irrigation and Under-Secretary to Government, Public Works Department (Irrigation), has been changed to Chief Engineer for Irrigation and Joint Secretary to Government, Public Works Department (Irrigation).

LADY REAY distributed the prizes to the Bombay Volunteer Rifles on Wednesday evening, the 8th inst. and Lord Reay subsequently delivered a brief address, in the course of which he remarked that when the demands on the British army were so extremely heavy and diversified, as they were at the present time, it was a gratifying circumstance that they had such a splendid reserve of men as the volunteers.

DURING the period that the Hon. J. B. Richey, C.S.I., holds the appointment of a temporary Member of Council, Mr. J. Nugent will act as Chief Secretary to Government, with charge of the Revenue, Financial, General and Separate Departments, and Mr. C. G. W. Macpherson, C.I.E., as Secretary to Government, with charge of the Political, Secret, Judicial and Educational Departments.

THE following appointments are gazetted on H.E. the Governor's staff:—Mr. G. H. R. Hart, to be Private Secretary; Captain J. Boyle, 2nd Battalion Royal Irish Fusiliers, to be Military Secretary; Lieut. B. M. Hamilton, 2nd Battalion East Yorkshire Regiment, and Lieut. T. C. Hunt, 2nd Battalion Royal Lancaster Regiment, to be aides-de-camp; and Surgeon W. K. Hatch to be medical officer.

IT is stated that Professor Wordsworth has sent in a strong protest to the Bombay Government against the post of the Director of Public Instruction having been given to an outsider in preference to officers in the Educational Department. Mr. Wordsworth's contention is that the members of that department have prior claims to the post, though he himself does not care to have it. The Jam-i-Jamshed, which makes this statement, trusts that this letter, supported as it is by the Press, will have some good effect.

KHAN BAHADOOR MUNCHERJEE C. MURZBAN, Executive Engineer at the Presidency, has obtained three months' leave of absence for the purpose of being present at the Antwerp Exhibition. Mr. Muncherjee was specially deputed by Government to inspect the buildings for the late Calcutta Exhibition; and he now goes to Holland, at his own expense, to study the latest improvements in Exhibition buildings before taking into hand the raising of the structures intended for the forthcoming Bombay Exhibition. On his way back, Mr. Muncherjee will travel a second time over Europe.

WE take the following items of Personal Intelligence of our Indian visitors from the Journal of the National Indian Association:—

The Benchers of Lincoln's Inn have awarded to Mr. Satyendra Prasanna Sinha the Senior Scholarship in Equity, of the value of one hundred guineas, as the result of an Examination held on March 20th.

At the late General Examination of students of the Inns of Court, the Council of Legal Education have awarded to the following students certificates that they had satisfactorily passed a public Examination: Mancherjee Merwanjee Bhowanagree (Lincoln's Inn), and Ardesheer Kavasjee Settna (Middle Temple).

Mr. Aurung Shah, of Assam, has passed the second M.B., C.M. Examination in the University of Glasgow. He obtained: (1) High commendation in Surgery; (2) a second-class certificate of Honours in Senior Anatomy; (3) a second-class certificate of Honours in Physiology.

At the close of the spring session of the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, the diploma of the College was awarded to the two Bengal Government Scholars of 1883, Bhupal Chandra Basu and Atul Krishna Ray, who both passed the Examination with Honours.

Mr. Cawas Lalca and Mr. D. A. D'Monte, of Bombay, have obtained the M.D. (Brussels) Degree. Mr. D'Monte has been appointed Clinical Assistant at the Hospital for Women, Soho-square.

Mr. C. C. Sen has passed the Primary Examination in Anatomy and Physiology of the Royal College of Surgeons of England.

Mr. E. M. de Souza, of Bombay, has passed the second M.B., C.M. Examination of the University of Aberdeen.

Mr. Cowasjee Jehanghier Readymoney had the honour of being presented to Her Majesty at the Drawing Room held on March 18th. We have already mentioned that his wife had attended the Drawing Room of that date.

Mr. Cawas Lalca and Mr. Piyare Lal had the honour of being presented to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales at the Levée held March 18th.

Arrival.—Dr. P. Lisboa, L.M. and S., Bombay, for medical study.

(From the Indian Chronicle.)

We learn on the authority of the Hindoo Patriot that at a late meeting of the central committee of the landholders of Bengal and Behar, it was resolved, after a very prolonged discussion, to send a deputation to England, to lay the grievances of the zemindars before the public and the Parliament of Great Britain. It must have been in the very extremity of despair that such a formidable resolution could have been adopted, for we must remember that to a Hindoo a journey to England still means social ostracism with its many attendant evils; and if a gentleman in the position of the Maharajah of Durbhungah, or his brother, should be willing to brave the dangers of a social persecution, it must be so under a sense of imperative duty—under a sense of great injustice done to the class he represents, and under the overwhelming anticipation of many impending perils. We admire the resolution; for a man, or a body of men, who, when they are threatened with annihilation, cannot do anything better than helplessly weep like women or children, do not deserve to live; and we are not altogether hopeless of that justice being done to the zemindars in England which the Government of India, to their eternal disgrace, be it said, have refused to do. The zemindars have at their command wealth and intelligence; they have a strong case, and they can put it strongly, and the people of England are well-known haters of injustice. Let a deputation go to England and appeal to every class of men—the rich and the poor alike. Let it appeal to the Conservatives, to the Liberals, and to the Radicals. Conservatives, Liberals, and Radicals may differ from one another as to the principles of Government, but they cannot certainly hold different opinions where the honour of England may be at stake. At present the two latter classes of Englishmen are disposed to keep aloof from the agitation against the Bengal Tenancy Bill, owing to the false stories sedulously circulated by the Government of India and their agents, as to the oppression of the zemindars, and the wretchedness of the peasantry—stories circulated to keep up the fanciful analogy which some people saw between the condition of Bengal and the condition of Ireland, and, therefore, between the character of the Bengal Tenancy Bill and the character of the Irish Land Act. But when it becomes known that the zemindars of Bengal, instead of being oppressive and tyrannical, have exercised their privileges with a moderation almost culpable in its nature; when it becomes known that the peasantry of Bengal, on the most undoubted testimony, is a substantial peasantry growing in prosperity year by year; when it becomes known that whatever might be the character of Mr. Gladstone's Irish Land Act the character of the Bengal Tenancy Act is ungodly and spoliatory in the extreme degree, that the Bill involves the breaking of the plighted words of the British Government, that it benefits neither the zemindar nor the ryot, and is wanted by neither; when it becomes known that the Bill is calculated to foster litigation to an enormous extent, and that it robs the zemindar, not for the ryot, but for a class of useless middlemen whom political economy does not recognise; when it becomes also known that the Bill has been passed in the teeth of the opposition of the whole country with indecent haste, and almost illegally; when all this becomes known—it is certain the Liberals and the Radicals will as readily join the zemindars as the Conservatives. Let a deputation go to England by all means. We daresay it will receive valuable help from Mr. Lethbridge, who has been rendering us yeoman's service since the Government of India determined to rob us.

THE QUETTA COMMAND.

As long as the author of Indian Policy is the Military Secretary to the Government of India, the subject of the abolition of the Presidency armies will be frequently aired in the columns of the Pioneer. We are now informed that "one inevitable outcome of the arrangement for the military demonstration in Beluchistan must be the transfer of Quetta from the Supreme Government. At present it owns divided allegiance, the garrison being subject to the Commander-in-Chief as regards its movements and to the Commander-in-Chief at Bombay in questions of discipline." We believe that an inevitable outcome of a war would be to point out the fatal policy of neglecting any portion of the Indian Army. At the present moment it would have been well if the military bureaucrats at Simla had paid more attention to the discipline and efficiency of the Madras Army. The Madras Army has suffered from having no frontier to guard, for frontier service is the best school for officers and men. The frontier of Sind has been a great school for the Bombay Army, and it was there that men like Jacob and Green won their laurels. It has always been guarded by Bombay troops, and to deprive them entirely of the privilege would be unjust. The Quetta command must soon be a division, and the General Commanding should be the officer best fitted for the post, and the service to which he belongs should have no weight in the matter. The three brigades should be composed of Bengal, Bombay, and Madras troops, commanded by officers taken from the three presidencies. It is neither our intention nor our wish to make comparisons between the armies of the three presidencies, but it is, we consider, the duty of the Government to remember that, so long as it is deemed expedient to maintain three separate armies, so long should all three armies have a fair share of active service when the opportunity offers. It is easily understood that the authorities at Simla are more ultimately acquainted with the soldierlike qualities of the officers and men of the Bengal Army, but a good soldier must have various good qualities, and it cannot be admitted that all these are concentrated in the big brother of Bengal.

The Pioneer, however, informs us that besides taking Quetta from the control of the Bombay Chief the reform will go much further. "Lord Ripon, to do him justice, fought the case against the presidential army system well, and when he was beaten went to declare that the first war would be fatal to it. For ourselves we believe that the mere preparations for a possible war will be fatal to it, so glaring, so monstrous, so injurious are the obstacles it raises to effective military administration." Lord Ripon we should have hardly brought forward as a sound witness on military reform. It was the ex-Viceroy who, to effect a paltry saving, reduced the strength of the army. It was the late Viceroy who, for the cabals of party, put a stop to the completion of the Quetta Railway, and, if war breaks out, he will be morally answerable for the life of every soldier who dies on the march during this trying time of the year. The glaring, the monstrous obstacles are illustrated in a somewhat wild manner by the Pioneer. We are told that "this, for instance, is what would happen if a regiment were required from Burma in the North-West. The Commander-in-Chief would notify his desire to the Government of India, who would notify it to the Government of Madras, who would notify it to the Commander-in-Chief of Madras, who is in the same camp at Pindee as the Commander-in-Chief. The Commander-in-Chief of Madras would reply to the Madras Government, who would reply to the Supreme Government, who would give the Commander-in-Chief his answer. Is not such an illustration as this worth a ton of Blue-Books?" True, if the illustration was apt instead of being absurd. We remember a similar illustration employed in a famous despatch sent to the Secretary of State for India, in which a desperate attempt was made to prove that the transport arrangements made at Bombay during the Egyptian Campaign were not so good as they had been publicly represented to be by the Government of India. We discussed the paper at the time, and pointed out its fallacies and absurdities. No sane man and few idiots would think of moving a regiment from Burma to the North-West. If there were three army corps the Commander-in-Chief would have to notify his desire to the Government of India, who would have to consult the Madras Government, who would consult the General Commanding the Army corps. This could only be remedied if the Supreme Government declared that the local Governments should have no voice in the management of their military affairs, and that the army corps should receive their orders direct from the Supreme Government. But neither the Army Commission nor the Supreme Government have been foolish enough to propose any drastic reform of this nature.

We have no objection, and there is not an officer in the whole Bombay Army, we believe, who has any objection to the Presidency commands being abolished, if by the abolition we gain efficient army corps. But they must be army corps in reality, and not merely in name. Abolishing the Commander-in-Chief and placing the Presidency armies under men of inferior rank would not change them into army corps. We might make our Presidency army more like a German army corps if we made it a more symmetrical and compact body. The regiments comprising it should at once be made up to their full strength in infantry, cavalry, and artillery. Its transport and medical service should be complete. The entire equipment should be under the control of the chief. At the present moment responsible officials, if they were free to speak, could tell of the grave inconvenience and injury to the public interest which arises from having the Commissariat Department entirely independent of the military authorities. In our army reform we are fond of following the example of Germany, and in so doing we show our wisdom. But the copy ought to be accurate. Germany has her army corps, but they are efficient masses composed of efficient units. It ought also to be remembered by the red-tape reformers at Simla that Prussia does not interfere in the internal control of her army corps. In India bureaucratic routine hangs heavily over all those who attempt to improve our local armies. The mere preparations for a possible war reveal in great things and small the blighting effects of trying to manage an army by resolutions from Simla. We trust that the experience of the Egyptian campaign has taught the Simla bureaucrats the important lesson that they ought to put some sort of trust in the local authorities. Considerable delay and inconvenience was then caused by men residing fourteen hundred miles from the sea attempting to carry out themselves the embarkation of troops by means of letters and telegrams instead of putting confidence in the men who possessed considerable experience in the embarkation of troops. We have heard a great deal of late years of Count von Moltke with his head over some papers at the far end of a telegraph wire conducting a campaign, but people are apt to forget that the man at the end of a wire was Count von Moltke. It is a painful fact that nature has not made every Military Secretary to Government a Moltke.—Times of India.

THE SARYA TURCOMANS.

The correspondent of the Lahore paper with the Afghan Boundary Commission, writing from Penj-deh on the 14th ult., gives an interesting account of the Sarya Turcomans. He says:—

A few months ago few knew or cared to know much about the settlement of the Turcomans in this valley, and for some time after we reached our winter quarters at Bala Murghab the majority of our camp, if asked about Penj-deh, would have looked upon it as the place where the best specimens of carpet work were to be obtained, and nothing more. Since then, however, matters have shaped themselves, and most of you now know how important a position Penj-deh is now considered to be by those who have thoroughly studied the question. You have already been told about the main divisions of the Saroks, and I will only incidentally point out that the Suktis are by far the most influential and wealthiest of all. In former days, when Alaman or raids were common, it was the Sukti who provided the horses and the Bairej or Harzegi who ran the risk, but on all occasions the lion's share of the loot fell to the Sukti tribe.

Penj-deh proper is situated in a large open valley between the Murghab and Kushk rivers, but the Turkoman settlements extend up both rivers.

Pul-i-Kishti is situated on the Kushk river, about half a mile distant from Ak Tepe, and the Murghab and Kushk rivers join about one and a-half miles to the west of this point. The cultivation extends from twelve miles north of Ak Tepe to twenty-seven miles south of the same. The Turcomans graze their flocks from Tuknam Ali in one direction to Maruchuk, and of the Kushk river as far as the Chasma Sabz Pass and to the west as far as Gulran. The Turkoman population of Penj-deh is about 40,000, but it is somewhat difficult to make any exact calculation. You will, perhaps, ask how the Turcomans obtained their wealth, and the answer is by loot. Now they have had to give up looting they have turned their minds to agriculture. Horse, cattle, sheep, and camel breeding flourish among them, and the Suktis especially go in extensively for carpet manufacture. One has heard so much about the exploits and bravery of the Turcomans that I fully expected to find that they were averse to turning their swords into ploughshares; but now I have seen more of them I fancy a great deal of what has been said about them is so much talk, and nothing else. To my mind they are essentially a chicken-hearted race. Fight they would, no doubt, if they had to defend their wives, and children, and homes, but I have no notion of their fighting on any other account, unless there was a chance of looting some badly-protected flocks or caravans, on which they could pounce down upon in overwhelming numbers.

The Turcomans essentially worship mammon, and they would sell their souls for a handful of rupees. They worship wealth in any form, and when they talk of their big men they do not say that such-and-such a man is known to all by his bravery, but on the worldly wealth in cash or flocks and herds that he possesses. There is one point among them, however, which is worthy of note, and that is, that as they have never acknowledged any king up to the present time, they look with great respect on their spiritual advisers, many of whom occupy a prominent position among them. I, curiously enough, came across an illustration of this in one of their Turki rhymes, the mullah of which was that other peoples look up to the King of Bokhara as their leader, but that the Turcomans having no king, look up to their spiritual heads or ishans. Turning one moment to the ishans, or, what in India we should call moolahs, we find that in former times the people paid tithes to them freely, but that of late years the custom has gradually been given up, and now only small presents are made on the occasion of any marriage or death, and when some legal decision has been given. The ishans naturally feel this, but are wise in their generation, and keep their complaints to themselves; for they justly remark that if we left them many others would come in our place, who would be only too glad to get anything that the people chose to give them. These ishans are not necessarily Syeds, but they may be the descendants of some very great pir or saint. Bokhara is looked upon as the great seat of piety in Central Asia, and consequently, if you ask the ishans where they received their education, they will reply in Bokhara—very often, I suspect when they have never been there at all. They all know Persian as well as Turki, and a few are acquainted with Arabic.

Let us turn for a moment to the kibitkas in which these people live. They are of two classes, large and small, and vary in price from 80 to 250 *kran*s, or 32 to 100 rupees. These are all made at Khiva, and as a dwelling for the cold weather are as nearly perfect as possible. During the summer heat, which is here intense, the people construct houses of grass or wild plum thorn, something in the style of our khus-khus huts in India. If you take the kibitka of a wealthy Turcoman, you will generally find it arranged as follows:—The doorway is closed by a thick heavy purdah—so heavy, in fact, that the wind will not lift it. There is generally a high doorstep or board, which prevents the purdah from being blown in. Inside the purdah are a couple of wooden roughly carved doors, closing in the centre by a common metal clasp. On stepping into the kibitka, say in cold weather, you are agreeably surprised to find how warm and light it is, but this is due to the fire which is kindled in the centre of the floor. The kibitka top is removable, and when drawn to one or other side gives exit to the smoke, and also allows of a vertical light. The floor is covered with thick numdabs, for it is only on the occasion of marriages or deaths that these people indulge in the luxury of a carpet.

On the right you will see a large number of sacks standing on logs of wood to keep them off the ground. These contain the year's supply of wheat and barley. In the daytime, on the top of these, you see neatly folded the family bedding of numdahs and razais. Facing the sacks, on the opposite side of the kibitka, is generally the domestic strong box, a large iron or steel-bound wooden box of Russian manufacture covered with elaborate patterns, and picked out here and there with bits of gilt. This generally stands a little off the ground, and under you can usually see the family china: a teapot and cup or two. On one side of the strong box a place is set apart for the cooking vessels, which consist of iron basins with three little wings, these wings serving to keep the basin in its place on an iron tripod. A few roughly-carved wooden spoons, a wooden bowl, a Bokhara metal teapot, and a wooden hookah complete the list. Here and there about the place you will see a bag containing wools, another scissors, and the various implements used in carpet manufacture; here a bridle, there a halter, and so on. But I was nearly forgetting to tell you of two uncommonly European-looking articles of furniture which strike one on entering, and these are, two hat stands, constructed out of the branches of a tree, the branches having been cut off, simply leaving sufficient to hang things on. On these you will find all kinds of odds-and-ends, but especially the weapons of the male portion of the household. Among the Suktis especially there is a general appearance of comfort about their homes, and naturally, as you descend the scale of worldly riches, the comfort disappears by degrees.

Let me tell you one or two little points about their carpets. The colours, I find, come from Bokhara, and the wool is obtained here. After the wool is dyed, it is usually exposed for six months in the sun, and another six in the shade, and is then considered fit for use, and most people, I think, will agree that it has had a good trial to test its pucca quality. Silk is largely used and is also obtained from Bokhara. Carpets are not made in the cold season, but as a rule in the hot season, the work being carried on in the open. I have seen the process, but it would be tedious to describe; but I can say that from all I have seen there is no wonder that the carpets will stand any amount of wear, for the work is thoroughly well done and very strong. In these days, when it is an important question how to provide for our surplus female population in England, it is a pity that they do not set their nimble fingers to work and imitate the skill and thrifty habits of the daughters of the Turcomans, who from the youngest to the oldest employ their leisure moments in the useful manufacture of carpet work. Ladies of old were proficient in making tapestry, so I see no reason why their descendants should not take to a branch of the same industry.

The women here are wonderfully quick in seizing any new idea, and you would have smiled to see an old lady examine the button-holes of my coat and explain to her fellow Turkis that this was quite a new fashion, which would save them all a deal of trouble if they adopted it. Such things as buttons are unknown here.

Talking of garments reminds me that the striped red and black chintz, which is the ordinary garment of the Turcoman, is not made here, but comes from Khiva. The women in many cases wear the same, but the poorer classes wear Penj-deh-made cotton cloth dyed blue with indigo. The richer wear a thick washing silk made in Bokhara, and instead of chintz wear the Aluk Buluk silk chogas from the same place.

The majority of the Turcomans are addicted to tobacco, but they use the hookah fairly sparingly. As a rule you will see them chew tobacco, which they carry in little pear-shaped polished gourds.

All of these people indulge largely in green tea, and it is a pity our Indian tea manufacturers do not turn their thoughts this way, and produce a green tea of really good quality, which would out the China article from this part of the world.

A short time ago we had the chance of seeing a Turcoman Gymkhana, and from it one could judge of the character of the people to a great extent. Usually when they run their horses, two only race, so it is not difficult to decide which wins. But on this occasion, seven or eight horses started, and as many or more finished, and the row over who had won was amusing to see. The horses are freely whipped, but no spurs are used, and you consequently see a horse coming along in a zigzag course. Again, they have a playful habit of a horse joining in from half the distance and trusting to escape notice, but altogether the scene is a very rowdy one. Instead of with us, having a preliminary canter, they reverse the process, and the winning horses are walked down the course a little way after the race by their proud possessors, and then galloped back. However, horse and pony races there were, and a great deal of hard swearing took place. It was instructive to see how the various chiefs and ishans flogged the unruly crowd with downright good will, but they seemed to be used to it, and I must say I have seldom seen a better-tempered crowd.

A tug-of-war was introduced; ten Turcomans aside. But this did not suit them, so the crowd joined in and had a first-class tug, the only result of which was a useless expenditure of force, which broke the rope.

After the rope business was over, the wrestlers came on the scene and proceeded to throw each other by clasp round the waist and fixing their hands and wrists in their opponents' kummerbands, I suppose, to ensure a really good hold. The day finished up with a feu-de-joie, in which all the youths of the neighbourhood banged away with their old muskets to their hearts' content. As I have remarked before, so on this occasion not a single good horse or pony did I see. One or two looked fairly good specimens, but on close examination they showed so many faults that one would never have thought of investing in one for a moment.

Talking about Penj-deh would not be complete if I did not tell you of a wonderful cave which has been found here. It is situated in one of the hills overlooking the Murghab river, about seven or eight miles on the Maruchuk side of Ak Tepe.

It must not be supposed, from what I have said above, that I look on the Turcoman as unfit for any soldier's work. Far from it. I look on them at present as simply a rough material, who have never experienced any taste of discipline, but who, under proper guidance and instruction, would make admirable cavalry, or, what in many parts of this country would be more useful still, mounted infantry.

THE PAUCITY OF REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

When the Bengal Army mutinied in 1857 men somewhat rashly came to the conclusion that the system of our native army was radically wrong. General Jacob—no mean authority—asserted, "The faults which have led to the existing lamentable state of the native army of India are not those of individuals, but of system." A cry was raised that the irregular system was the best, because the Punjab Irregulars had behaved so well before the walls of Delhi. Men forgot that the Indian Empire had been won by the aid of the regular armies of Bengal, Bombay, and Madras. Their gallant deeds were buried in old despatches and histories. In the pages of Orme are to be found many examples of patient endurance of privations and fatigue and steady valour displayed by the native infantry of Fort St. George. It was the first battalion of the light regiment of Madras infantry which was the favourite corps of the Duke of Wellington. They were with him on every service, and the men of the corps used to call themselves "Wellesley ka Pultan;" and at Assaye they proved themselves worthy of the proud title. A staff officer after the battle saw some Mahomedans engaged in a funeral and inquired who they were burying. "We are going to put three brothers into one grave," said one of the party. The officer began to express his regret and offer some consolation to the survivors, when he was interrupted by one of the men. "There is no occasion," he said, "for such feelings or expressions; these men (pointing to the dead bodies) were sepoys; they have died in the performance of their duties; the Government they have served will protect their children, who will soon fill the ranks they have lately occupied." It was in our own Presidency that the first native corps were disciplined by the English; and a company of Bombay troops were present at Plassy, the victory which laid the foundation of the stately fabric—our Indian Empire. From the Bombay records can be gleaned many examples of splendid valour displayed by the Bombay sepoys and of their strong attachment to their European officers. The story of the sepoys at Arcot, made famous by Macaulay, can be matched in the annals of the Bombay Army. When General Mathew's detachment were made prisoners by Tippoo, the sepoys used to escape the vigilance of their guards and bring the small sums they had saved from their allowance—a pice a day—and implore them to accept their small gift. "We can live upon anything," they said, "but you require mutton and beef." It was at Copong that two sepoys of the Marine Battalion when attacked by a vast mob of Malays said to their officer, "Save yourself by flight, we will fight and die." At the same time they exposed themselves to the fury of their assailants and gave their commander time to escape to a boat. The history of the Bengal Army also abounds with examples of self-sacrifice and heroism displayed by the sepoy for his officer. In the hour of defeat, the courage, firmness and attachment of the native troops have been as conspicuous as in the hour of victory. History records how in Monson's retreat the sepoys bade their officers keep heart. "We will take you safe to Agra." Never was more devotion shown by a mercenary army. But no one can study Indian history without seeing that the devotion was not to a cause but to individuals. We find series of examples of good and of bad conduct by the very same men, all induced by individual examples. No sower has a keener sense of the merits or demerits of his officers than the sepoys. The Bengal Army perished because it ceased to be sufficiently officered and well officered. There were, doubtless, concomitant causes, but the paucity of officers was one of the chief which led up to the great Mutiny.

The evil that men do lives after them, and the good is often interred with their bones, was amply illustrated in the case of the old Indian army. We have revived the memory of their good deeds, because the tendency of the advocates of the irregular system is to disparage to an unjust degree the conduct of the regular troops and of the old system. The irregular system was blindly taken as a model after the Mutiny, and the number of officers attached to each regiment reduced. No more fatal blunder was ever made. The paucity of officers in an irregular regiment was the worst feature in the system, and the evil was only mitigated by the officers of the Punjab force being the picked men of the army. It was also not borne in mind by the men who rashly changed the system, that the Mutiny of the Hindostanee sepoy battalions rendered available for the Punjabee battalions and for duty a swarm of officers. Even then Lord Clyde was compelled to recruit some of the Sikh corps with officers from European regiments. In the Umteylah campaign Chamberlain complained of the paucity of European officers, and where, petty as the operation was, the cry for European officers was so loud and urgent that Sir Hugh Rose, himself a staunch advocate for the new organization, ordered up sixty officers. Though the old system had its abuses on service, the regiments were fairly enough officered, and frequently very well officered. The consequence was that, even when sharing on a hard-fought field a partial check with their European associates, they were rallied quite as quickly as the latter by their European officers, whereas a regiment on the irregular system is on such occasions, from the paucity and loss of its European officers irrecoverable. Sir Henry Durand in a very able minute on the irregular system wrote as follows:—"The old system has been swept away, and its faults and merits are a thing of the past, but the faults and feebleness of the new organisation are a thing of the present, and will force themselves on the attention of Government the moment any tension comes upon our Indian military system and establishments."

A tension has come, and the great fault of the new system, a paucity of officers, has been forced upon the attention of the Government by the first engagement in the Soudan. The case of the 28th N.I. is a striking one, and ought to be brought to the notice of the military reformers at Simla. It might teach them that army reform means something more than the mere changing of the names of the Presidency armies. When the regiment was ordered on service the full complement of officers had to be made up from other regiments. In the first battle three officers are hors de combat, and have to be replaced again from other corps, who in their turn may be ordered on service, and would have to be made up in turn from other regiments. It is not only robbing Peter to pay Paul, but a general despoiling of the whole of the apostles. In addition to this the moment war breaks out officers are drawn from regiments at the request that is the order, of Government, for every conceivable duty—transport, commissariat—and the regiments are denuded of officers at the most critical moment. This, of course, is most unjust on regiments and has the worst possible effect, for you take from them the officers they know and whose lead they are accustomed to follow. At the present moment it is possible we may have to oppose native troops to white troops, and it is absolutely necessary that there should be a large number of British officers with each regiment. Indian military history teaches us that native troops, well led, have successfully crossed bayonets with Europeans, but badly led the same men have been useless. But it is impossible for men to be well led by strangers. Hannibal sneered at the elder Scipio for his presumption, when, unknown to his own men, in opposing a general who could call each man under his command by his name. The great need of a reserve of officers has often been pointed out to the Supreme Government by our own Military Department as represented by the Commander-in-Chief. But under the able administration of Lord Ripon, which the Pioneer so fondly admires, nothing was done to provide for this crying want. At the close of the last war the Bombay Army was about eighty officers short of its proper number, and there was not a single regiment on the frontier but what was scandalously and dangerously under-officered. A glance at the Army List will show that not much has been done to remedy this evil. We read the question as one of the most vital importance to the native army, and we call the attention of every "true reformer" to it. When the units have been made efficient, then will be the time to begin the reform of the mass.—Times of India.

MR. GRANT DUFF ON THE CRISIS.

MR. GRANT DUFF, the Governor of Madras, speaking at the annual meeting of the Doveton College, Madras, on the 1st instant, said:—

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—It is but little that I have to say before these proceedings, so agreeable to the prize-takers and their relatives, are brought to a conclusion. I am glad to observe that the numbers of the college, if we look back through a series of years, show a tendency to increase. They would be higher, I dare say, this year than they are, if it were not that the Principal has been wisely jealous on the subject of promotions, and it is determined that the boys shall not be put in higher places than their acquirements bona fide entitle them to. His firmness in this respect has received the approbation of the Government inspector, and other educational authorities. Mr. Barrow can, I see, report tolerable, but only tolerable, success in the university examinations. I hope that in the future the application of his pupils may second his own zeal and obtain much better results. I observe that he is in favour of your taking a more active part in the Volunteer movement, for which you already do a good deal; thirty-six volunteers (of whom six are masters and thirty pupils) is a very fair contribution; but in these stirring times it might be well added to. I sincerely hope, and I fully believe, that peace will be maintained, for, to borrow a happy expression that was used in a letter which I received a couple of days ago, "there is nothing so stultifying as war"; but in spite of the eighteen Christian centuries behind us, war must, I fear, be occasionally accepted as a sad necessity, and, when it comes near, as it seemed a day or two ago to do, it is delightful to see that the English nation—now no longer cooped up, as in the days of Elizabeth, within the narrow limits of an island, but extending over a large portion of the habitable globe—spring to arms with the same alacrity with which, on an occasion to be remembered throughout all the ages, sprang to arms the little handful of men in the old country when, as is described in a poem with which many of you are doubtless acquainted.

"—about the lovely close of a warm summer day,

There came a gallant merchant ship full sail to Plymouth bay."

"There probably never was any moment in our history in which so many persons in England were averse to any except an absolutely necessary war as are now averse to it, and there certainly never was a moment when such persons had so much influence on the Government of the country. Yet never since England was England has any war, if there is to be war (which I do not believe) found us so prepared—prepared in Great Britain, prepared in India, prepared at every point which an enemy can reach. And why are we so prepared? Because we have been remembering, of late, the true words of a great statesman and a great soldier:—"The balance of power will always be held, so far as any one State can pretend to do so, by the country which, in proportion to its powers, has economised its material resources to the highest point and acquired the highest degree of moral ascendancy by an honest and consistent allegiance to the laws of morality in its domestic policy and its foreign relations." With resources unapproached by those of any other State, cherishing an anxious desire to avoid all interference with other nations, but full of a calm determination, in the general interest of civilised mankind, not to submit to flagrant wrong, we abide the future, confident that the volunteers amongst your numbers and in the Presidency generally, together with all our forces by land and sea, will, if it must come, which God forbids, to what the great Spanish poet Calderon, called "the last argument of Kings abundantly do their duty." Never forget, however, that even the most glorious of combats is at best but a splendid calamity ever to the victor. No wiser words were ever penned than those of the great Commander (the husband of the Princess Royal) whose clear and ready judgment decided the most epoch-making of modern battles—the battle of Koniggratz—"he who orders war by a stroke of his pen knows not what he calls up from Hades."

THE prospect of a war with Russia has had the effect of stimulating the Volunteer movement throughout the country. In Calcutta steps are being taken to form a Volunteer Reserve, and in Bombay and Madras mounted infantry corps are in process of formation.

AN insurrection in Chinese Turkestan is reported. The revolt is headed by Kalu Beg, son of the late Ameer Yacoub Beg, and Atalik Ghazi, who is said to have escaped from Samarkand, with the connivance of the Russians.

OUR trade returns for the eleven months of the year ending the 28th of February are by no means favourable. Apart from Government stores, the total imports into India amount to Rs.48,50,01,348, as compared with Rs.48,52,52,885 for the corresponding period of last year; while the exports show a much greater falling off, the respective amounts being Rs.74,33,66,713 and Rs.79,35,01,405. The exports, indeed, are three lakhs less than those of 1882-83—a year of comparative depression.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING.—On the night of the 29th ultimo two natives, inhabitants of the village of Madagar, Kolhapore Collectorate, were killed by lightning while they were proceeding through a field. It appears that a heavy shower of rain was falling at the time at the time and the men sought the shelter of a tree when they were struck. Death was instantaneous.

THE GREAT HANDEL FESTIVAL.—All elements of the extensive permanent musical organisation that gives us every three years the national celebration of Handel's genius at the Crystal Palace are now fairly astir, in preparation for the great festival of June next, that is to mark the bicentenary of that master whose works are more intimately part of the religious as well as the musical life of the English people than are any others. For this reason the festival that would fall due next year is to be held in 1885, and the promise that, musically at least, it will surpass all its predecessors is abundant. The most famous and accomplished solo singers have been engaged; but the quality and organisation of the stupendous band and chorus—of 4,000 performers—is receiving very anxious attention. Never before has the work of testing each voice that is admitted to take part in the performance, and the elimination of weak and decayed voices, been so closely practised. At the last festival, it will be remembered, the fatal illness of Sir Michael Costa to the last moment made it doubtful who was to take his place, and Mr. Manns had to accept the bâton on the very morning of the rehearsal day. How Mr. Manns, in very short time, grasped with authority the delighted allegiance of the army of representative instrumentalists, and then the loyal musical obedience of the chorus, will be long remembered. But to these great advantages he is able to add this time the all-important gain of preparing the army of executants and singers, whose united efforts are to present the art result. This duty Mr. Manns is discharging with splendid energy and scrupulous artistic care. There are to be double the number of rehearsals of the metropolitan voices—the great body styled the "London Contingent." Energetic efforts are being made to promote the necessary cohesion of the parts of the great choir, hitherto more or less separated until they met on rehearsal day in the Great Orchestra. The contingents of voices from the provinces will include, as on all former occasions, the cathedral choirs and the great county societies. It is hoped that provincial centres may be formed, where the district voices may be brought together in large subsidiary divisions for perfect rehearsal under Mr. Manns himself, so that all the benefit may accrue, when a few great bodies of performers shall meet on the Great Orchestra to rehearse together, rather than multitudinous smaller choral bodies, or isolated component voices. The constitution of the whole chorus, in regard to its musical quality, is now nearly completed, and the great rehearsals will soon begin. The Londoners are to meet in Exeter Hall as heretofore. The local centres have yet to be fixed. Already the regular habitués of the Handel Festivals, who attend every day, have commenced securing the best seats, that are always first allotted to them, and their numbers furnish every indication that interest in the great celebration is unabated—indeed, is as keen this year as the best wisher can desire, on account of this being a special celebration. Applications come from the most distant places, from America, from Italy, Sweden, all parts of Germany, and—whatever may be the present turmoil of affairs political—from Russia.

PUBLIC FEELING IN THE NORTH.—A Newcastle correspondent writes to the Globe:—"Nothing has demonstrated more clearly how anxious the public at large are for the immediate adoption of strong measures for safeguarding Herat than the sympathy displayed by audience after audience in this locality for Mr. Charles Marvin's well-known views on the subject. Mr. Marvin was invited to lecture at Newcastle-on-Tyne by a committee of local politicians, the most part Liberals, and arrived under the disadvantage of having to contend with the peace-at-any-price, Pall Mall Gazette views of Mr. John Morley, M.P., who had only delivered two days earlier a strong speech against the Government and in favour of Russia. The first lecture was delivered at the Tyne Theatre on Easter Sunday, and was a remarkable success. Before the lecture commenced over 4,000 people had filled the building, and several thousands were turned away. The lecturer illustrated his remarks by lime-light maps and portraits, and although his views were what is termed advanced," there was not a dissentient cry the whole evening, and the audience displayed unbounded enthusiasm. To quote the Newcastle Chronicle:—"Not since the days of David Urquhart has a Newcastle audience listened to a discourse on Russia where her insidious advance was so graphically delineated. Mr. Marvin is an eminently instructive lecturer, and the vast audience which crowded the Tyne Theatre to listen to his exposition of the Anglo-Russian question remained for nearly two hours under the spell of an artless but effective eloquence." The immense success of the lecture was a surprise even to Mr. Marvin's admirers, for it was known that the Caucus had sent a strong force to create a disturbance, and these men were among the most vociferous applauders of the lecture. Before he had left the platform promises were exacted that he would repeat the lecture at South Shields, Sunderland, and Gateshead, and these came off last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday respectively. In the first instance the Mayor of South Shields was among the spectators, and at the latter the Mayors of Sunderland and Gateshead themselves took the chair. All three lectures were characterised by the same harmony of sentiment with the lecturer, and the same unbounded enthusiasm for his views regarding his defence of India. Public feeling manifested itself plainly by the storm of hisses which greeted General Komaroff's portrait, and peals of applause provoked when the portraits of Mr. Lumsden and Roberts appeared on the screen. Mr. Marvin has returned from London, but he has received several invitations from the great towns to deliver lectures on the Russian advance and is expected to make a tour through the country in the course of a few days. Referring to his departure the Newcastle Chronicle says:—"Mr. Charles Marvin having closed his lecture campaign in this district, for the present, will return to London to-day. By close study, as well as by personal association and investigation, Mr. Marvin has made himself an authority on the Central Asian question, and on this all-absorbing topic of the hour he is full of interesting matter, as our reports of his lectures testify. Though new to the platform—for we may say that in Newcastle he faced a large popular audience for the first time—his clear voice, clear head, and intimate knowledge of his subject combine to make him a most acceptable lecturer. But the most gratifying feature of the four meetings he addressed was this, that in spite of echoes from the pro-Russian party, his audiences, composed of Liberals and Tories—men of all shades of political belief—responded with the heartiest patriotism of feeling to his warning notes on the subject of Russia's real designs against the peace and welfare of this country." Judging by the profound impression made in the North by his lectures, which in every case have been different, and have been reported in full, there can be hardly a doubt that a lecture by Mr. Marvin in every great centre would be of immense value at this juncture, and it is to be hoped that the local politicians will follow the example of Newcastle, and fight the pro-Russian party by inviting to explain to them an author who is admittedly the first English authority of the day on the Russo-Indian Question.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 28, 1885.

THE LAST DEBATE ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE debate on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, in the Legislative Council of the Viceroy of India, was brought to a close on the 11th of March, a day that should henceforth be memorable in the history of Bengal legislation. Only a few amendments remained to be considered; and most of these amendments, which were moved and seconded by the two independent members, the Maharajah of Darbhanga and the Hon. Peari Mohun Mookerjee, were ruthlessly rejected by Sir S. Bayley and his official following. The Council then adjourned for lunch, and when they returned to the Council-room, with mind and body refreshed, several very remarkable speeches were made on the final passing of the Bill, which should be carefully considered by the Secretary of State for India and his Council before they allow the Act to take its place on the Indian Statute-book.

Undoubtedly the opponents of the Bill bore away the palm for eloquence and argument. The Maharajah of Darbhanga spoke briefly. He condemned the Bill as an impracticable, unfair, and unworkable measure; and he pointed out that, he and his colleague, the Hon. Peari Mohun Mookerjee, were the only two members of the Council who possessed any practical knowledge of zemindari management. He went on to say, "I yield to no one in my desire to see the ryots protected from oppression, but it is my deliberate opinion that this Bill will not accomplish this object, but the contrary. I believe that the constant intervention of the revenue and judicial officers of Government in all the details of agricultural life will lead to the most widespread confusion, and will be as disastrous to the ryots as to the zemindars themselves. I view with the deepest concern the outlook before us. I dread the passions and animosities which the litigation will kindle and inflame. I can only hope that these anticipations may not be realised. But whatever the result may be, I have the satisfaction of feeling that I have acted as the true friend of my country and of the Government in warning you of the political dangers which in my belief underlie the proposed legislation."

The Hon. Peari Mohun Mookerjee also made a forcible appeal to the Council. He reminded them of the words of Jeremy Bentham, that the legislator is not the master of the disposition of the human heart—he is only their interpreter and their minister. "Allow me to ask," he said, "if the Bengal Tenancy Bill satisfies the expectations of either the landholders or the ryots? The resolutions passed at meetings held in different parts of these provinces, the numerous memorials which have been submitted by landlords and ryots alike, and the public opinion which has found expression in every section of the native and Anglo-Indian Press give an emphatic negative to this query. The landholders stand aghast at the vista of the lawsuits and litigation before them, involving zemindar and ryot in common ruin. Nor do the ryots appreciate the imaginary benefits which are offered them. They loudly express their consternation. I would beg your lordship and the Council to consider whether it is desirable to pass without further inquiry and deliberation a measure which it has been publicly said will shake the confidence of the people in the faith of the British nation, and will set brooding over their wrongs a large section of the community who are noted for their loyalty and devotion to the British Crown."

We have been obliged, from want of space, to compress the two speeches which have been quoted; and unfortunately there is still less room to represent the purport of the speeches which Mr. Reynolds and Sir Rivers Thompson and Sir S. Bayley and the Viceroy delivered in support of the Bill. With curious and obviously preconcerted unanimity these high officials produced an argument which seems to us to be equally novel and fictitious. They have discovered that the new Bill is drafted in the spirit of the Regulations with which Lord Cornwallis promulgated the Permanent Settlement in 1793. They said that if Lord Cornwallis could rise from his grave he would give his vote in support of the official view of the Bill. It is to be hoped that the speakers conscientiously believed what they said. But did they ever read the Regulations of 1793? In the Regulation 17 of 1793 Lord Cornwallis declared that it was essential to the prosperity of the country, and the punctual collection of the public revenue, that landholders should have the means of collecting their rents without being obliged to have recourse to the Courts of Justice and incurring the delay and expense necessarily attending a law process for the recovery of every arrear. How do they reconcile this sweeping declaration with the spirit or the letter of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which drives both landholders and ryots into a hopeless sea of litigation?

THE GRIEVANCES OF INDIAN EDUCATIONAL OFFICERS.

It is curious to observe how regularly, after short intervals of very few years, the local Governments in India, with very few exceptions, recur to a policy of encroachment on the undoubted and undeniable rights of their superior educational officers. The fact is that the educational officer, being appointed direct from the home Universities by the Secretary of State, is in India nullius in loco. He has not the advantages of the faithful Dowb, appointed to his office by the local Government because he is somebody's cousin or nephew, and tenderly looked after by the aforesaid somebody; nor can he fall back on the esprit-de-corps of the regular Civil Service, for he has never passed through the ordeal of the competitive examination. On the other hand, the Education Department, being unquestionably the corps d'élite of the Indian Services, at least so far as academical status and social position go, has naturally been allotted a certain number of well-paid posts, sufficiently lucrative to attract the covetous regards of a large number of rivals, especially in these days of stagnant promotion and general impetuosity. And the consequence has been, that ever and anon attempts are made by the local Governments, harassed by the cries for promotion of their hungry young civilian brood, to poach on the educational domains and to appoint outsiders to the Directorships of Public Instruction. Where these attempts are met as they were in Bengal twelve years ago, they collapse as a matter of course. In Bengal, in 1873, Mr Lethbridge and Mr. Croft and Mr. Clarke promptly put their heads together, drafted a memorial to the Lieutenant-Governor, and got it signed by the whole Service; and when Sir George Campbell pushed it aside they returned to the charge, memorialised the Viceroy and the Secretary of State, and preserved the Bengal Directorship from further encroachment for at least a generation. But when, as on the occasion of the last vacancy in Madras, apathy or timidity rules in the educational ranks, a bad precedent is created; and the result has been that the precedent has been followed in the North-West Provinces, in the Punjab, and even in Bombay.

The first four paragraphs of the Bengal Memorial of 1873 prove the case of the educational officers literally "up to the hilt." That memorial was of course entirely successful, for it was impossible to answer its arguments; and even if the Viceroy had not promptly ordered justice to be done, which was certain to be the case, the Secretary of State might have been trusted to take care that the solemn pledges of the Government to his nominees were respected. We give here the four paragraphs of the Bengal Memorial to which we have referred:—

That in the Calcutta Gazette dated 13th July, 1859, there was published for general information, the following extract from a Despatch of the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India:—

"41. After a full consideration of the grounds on which the Court of Directors formerly gave their sanction, as a temporary arrangement, to the employment of covenanted Civil Servants in the Department of Education, Her Majesty's Government are, on the whole, of opinion that, as a general rule, all appointments in the Department of Education should be filled by individuals unconnected with the service of Government, either Civil or Military. It is not their wish that officers now in the Department should be disturbed for the sole purpose of carrying out this rule, and they are aware that difficulty might at present be experienced in finding well qualified persons, unconnected with the regular services, to fill vacant offices in the Department. But it is their desire that the rule now prescribed be kept steadily in view, and that every encouragement be given to persons of education to enter the educational service, even in the lower grades, by making it known that in the nominations to the higher offices in the Department, a preference will hereafter be given to those who may so enter it, if competent to discharge the duties."

2. That the hopes thus held out by the Government to "persons of education," to induce them to enter the Department in its lower grades, were confirmed by the interpretation put upon the paragraph quoted above, by his Excellency the late Lord Canning. In August, 1860, his Excellency declared, in answer to a Memorial from some Educational officers, that the said paragraph "was intended to signify the desire of Her Majesty's Government to recognize a preferential claim on the part of the Members of the Educational Service to the higher offices of the Department."

3. That the said hopes were further confirmed by a Despatch of the Right Honourable Sir Charles Wood, Secretary of State for India, dated 8th November, 1860. This Despatch gave a formal sanction to the words of his Excellency Lord Canning just recited; and with reference to the opinions of his Honour the then Lieutenant-Governor, which were unfavourable to the claims of Educational officers, Sir Charles Wood observed:—

"It is evident that the object stated by Lord Stanley of attracting highly educated men to the lower grades of the Educational Service of Government would be defeated if this view were acted upon; and I have to direct that Mr. Grant may be informed that while Her Majesty's Government would deprecate as strongly as he does such a constitution of the Educational Service in India, as would prevent the local Governments from going beyond it to fill any particular office, for which in its judgment the department could not supply a duly qualified incumbent, or for which in unusual cases any person of pre-eminent qualifications not then in the service of Government might be available, they must in accordance with Lord Stanley's despatch and the interpretation of it which you have given, maintain the preferential claim to promotion of the officers of the Educational Department."

4. That most of your Memorialists are graduates of the English, Irish, or Scotch Universities, whose academical distinctions have been honourably recorded in the class-lists and Triposes of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Edinburgh; and consequently (it is humbly submitted) they may be considered fairly to represent those "persons of education" who it was avowedly the object both of Lord Stanley and of Lord Halifax to attract to the department by the promise that vacant appointments in the higher grades should be given to them, except "in unusual cases."

THE Madras Mail says:—It is at present the intention of the Commander-in-Chief to reach Madras on his return from the north on the 17th instant, and to leave the same day for Ootacamund. He cannot hold a command on the frontier together with the command of the Madras Army, and at present he does not intend to resign the latter command. But events may so shape themselves this week that he will feel it his duty to elect active service in a field with which he is probably better acquainted than any officer in Her Majesty's army.

It has been in contemplation to reduce the number of regiments of Silledar Cavalry in Mysore, and the local paper believes the measure will be carried into effect at once. There are three regiments of Silledars, about 400 sabres each, stationed at Shemogah, Mysore and Bangalore respectively. One of these will be broken up and the men drafted to the other two, raising the strength of each regiment, under the new scheme, to 600 sabres. The only reduction in the new scheme will be in the number of officers.

EAST INDIA UNCLAIMED STOCKS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The principal object of this important Bill is to transfer to the Government of India all unclaimed stock and dividends undealt with for ten years or upwards.

There is no provision for advertising the names and descriptions of stockholders entitled to the unclaimed stock and dividends proposed to be transferred, although by Clause 10 it is provided that when a claimant appears he is to advertise for further claimants in such newspapers as the Bank of England or Ireland may direct. A list containing full particulars of funds transferred to the Secretary of State for India is to be kept at the India Office.

I would venture to ask you to allow me, through the medium of your valuable paper, to suggest that the list should be issued as a Parliamentary paper, and advertised in Indian and English newspapers, likely to be seen by the stockholders or their representatives. Also that the public should be allowed to consult the list on payment of a small fee, as they can now do the wills or letters of administration relating to the estates of persons dying in India.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

SIDNEY H. PRESTON.

PRODUCE MARKETS.

INDIAN TEA.—Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson report as follows on the Tea Market, from the 9th to the 23rd inst.:—Upwards of 38,000 packages have been catalogued for sale during the fortnight, including 2,600 of Ceylon and 4,100 packages of second-hand and reprinted tea. Demand has continued strong, and prices for all but the lowest grades have favoured sellers, quotations being especially firm for good Pekoes and Broken Pekoes and for the finer sorts of Pekoe Souchong and Broken leaf; while inferior kinds closed a little cheaper than last week, but with buyers at the reduction. Duty has been paid from the 1st to the 21st inst. upon 18,000,000lbs., as against 7,000,000lbs. last year—and the clearances from the warehouses continue heavy. During the past few weeks the dealers have been selling freely, and are now preparing for a good period of quietness after the Budget. As the date of the Budget has been altered to the 30th inst., auctions will be held on the 27th and 28th inst., 9,000 packages being already advertised; this week's sales ceased on the 21st inst. There remain about 55,000 packages to be sold to close the crop, against 100,000 packages at this date last season. The exports from Ceylon from the commencement of their shipping season (called 1st October) to 26th March were 1,000,000lbs., against 600,000lbs. in the previous year. About 6,000 packages have been sold here in the past two months, the average price being 1s. 3d., the same as was obtained last year for about half the quantity; many of the later imports show improved quality, and are readily taken by consumers.

THE BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6, 1885.

CLOSE upon half-a-century ago ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL first saw the light of day. At that time, and during the previous decades when it was preceded by the Asiatic Journal, on which it was founded, but little interest was taken in the East save by the few whom personal or family connection linked to the land of the "Nabobs." Nor is this strange. The privileged portion of the community, who went to shake the "pagoda" tree, but rarely returned to their mother-country save at very distant intervals, or at the termination of their career. To them India was not only a sphere of action, but a land of adoption—all their interests, all their aspirations centred in their new home; added to this, a journey to England meant not only a heavy dip into the exchequer, but a long and tedious voyage round the Cape of Good Hope. In such circumstances it can scarcely be denied that a journal designed well-nigh fifty years since for those who wished to trace the fortunes—sometimes too, perhaps, the misfortunes—of their family connections who chanced to toil beneath the scorching glare of an Eastern sun, is scarcely fitted to meet the requirements of the present day. Then the voyage to and from Calcutta was a matter of months; now, thanks to the Suez Canal and the use of steam, it is accomplished in as many weeks. Then news arrived only after the lapse of an interval when, according to the notions of 1835, the information would border upon "ancient history." Now an endless array of "dailies" places before the public the very events of the hour. Then a trip to or from the Queen's Eastern possessions was wearisome and costly; now it is scarce more than a holiday tour or an idle pastime. This change of front has necessitated a corresponding move on the part of ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL; and the attempt will be made to render it readable, not alone by those who know or take an interest in Oriental matters, but also by those who through mere curiosity, and in a spirit of inquiry, wish to learn what is going on the other side of the water. Nor should this be difficult. Does England teem with "romances of real life"? India does so more. Do the trifles and frivolities of everyday existence in this our mother-country tend to while away a fitful hour, much more do the "romances" of Eastern life afford cause for interest or subject of mirth. The entertainment of the season in London is an endless theme of conversation amongst the upper ten, and, perhaps, too, the lesser grades of society; why should an account of a Simla Calico Ball be cast aside as "flat, stale, and unprofitable"? Every one nowadays has a friend, relation, or acquaintance in India, and it cannot be otherwise than interesting to learn "what the world says" in a country where greater freedom and license gives that "flip" to the ordinary routine of life which is lacking in the prosaic monotony of the more sober-minded West.

So the attempt will be made to present to the public a journal, which, while as heretofore embodying the "matter of fact" side of human existence, shall at the same time afford to ordinary society a new subject of conversation, and open up to the "small talk" of English salons the "chit-chat" of the Indian station, and the rumours of the Eastern Bazaar.

With the view, also, of meeting a want which is sometimes felt in this country, of ascertaining what books to read which throw light upon Indian topics, every work connected with the East, provided that it has any claim to consideration, will be reviewed, and its merits or otherwise criticised. In no sense will the paper become a "party" journal; at the same time free and unbiassed views will be expressed in the shape of leading articles upon the current topics of the day, and as far as possible Indian matters will be treated from an Indian standpoint, with the advantage that ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL, appearing weekly, will be enabled to place before its readers a more connected narrative of events than would be possible were it a daily publication.

Lastly, venturesome as the undertaking may seem, an effort will be made to enlist the sympathies of the fair sex, by including in the news columns the lighter events of the Empire in regard to which individuals of the "female persuasion" are generally credited with a lively interest. The sensational paragraphs of the East must, it is contended, appeal to the sensational readers of the West. The making and the unmaking of careers, the failures, the successes of life, the joys and cares of everyday existence, are not less matters of general interest and concern in the clime of sunny Ind than in the regions of frigid England.

In a word the "hotchpot" shall be complete. The few may read how their friends and relatives have been gazetted to high sounding posts of dignity and honour; the many may find "pastures new" wherein to disport conversational powers, and display a knowledge of "men and manners" in an unknown country, while the last tit-bit from Simla or Poona may perchance cause a flutter amongst the gentle readers, and, it is hoped, move the heart of the still gentler purchaser.

With these explanatory observations we launch our craft, awaiting with confidence the breath of public favour.

Notes of the Week.

THE news contained in this week's issue is, of necessity, chiefly of war, warlike. When one subject engrosses the thoughts and conversation of all—and here we do not speak of Anglo-Indians only—it is impossible for any journal professing to inform, or to reflect public opinion, not to dwell on the burning topic of the day. It will be seen that the latest news speaks of peace—peace, we fear, wholly without honour; but our readers may rest assured that the issues of peace or war are but trembling in the balance, and one or two of the extracts subjoined may well be pondered as showing the deliberate and consistently consecutive character of Russian aggression. No rational person can suppose that this aggression, unfalteringly, and, as regards the Central Asiatic tribes, mercilessly and brutally pursued for more than a century, will be tamely abandoned in deference to a weak and divided English Cabinet. As is most justly remarked by Colonel Malleson in the National Review for this month:—

What at the present moment is most to be feared is that there will be a patched-up compromise, that Russia may propose that both Powers shall remain where they are—she in possession of the places she has fraudulently acquired, we holding our existing frontier; that neither shall advance farther. No sane man can doubt the result of the acceptance by England of such a proposal. England would undoubtedly remain true to her obligation; Russia employing the means used so successfully on countless occasions would suddenly seize Herat. She would take the opportunity of doing so when she had troops on the spot to support her action, when England was more embarrassed and less wide awake than she is at the present moment. She would excuse the action on the plea that the nomadic and predatory character of the population had actually forced the capture upon her. Of all possible arrangements, that arrangement would be for England the most humiliating and the most unsafe.

As remarked by one of our contemporaries, the atmosphere was, at the end of last week, "full of arbitration," and the present week opened with the announcement in both Houses, by Earl Granville in the Lords, and by Mr. Gladstone in the Commons, that the British Government had agreed with that of the Czar to refer to independent arbitration (generally understood to be that of the Emperor of Germany, or, failing him, of the King of Denmark) "any difference which may be found to exist in regard to the interpretation of the agreement between the two Cabinets of the 16th March." Even as to the real meaning to be affixed to these, as the Times calls them, "singularly ill-chosen" words, there seems to be a difference of opinion. Here it is presumed that the whole Penjdeh incident is to be submitted to the arbitrator's judgment; in St. Petersburg the idea of submitting Komaroff's conduct, or his statements, to any arbitrator is scouted. Another week will probably enable us to speak more decidedly on this important matter. In its present aspect it would seem that our Government have once more "caved in" to Russia.

OFFERS of assistance from the Native Princes and Chiefs continue to flow in on the Government from all sides, accompanied with expressions of the deepest loyalty and devotion to the Queen Empress of India. Mysore lends its bullocks, the breed with which Wellington and Harris were wont to campaign in the good days of yore. Nipal sends its Gurkhas—the only Native troops whose glittering sabres ever caused the British soldier to show the white feather—individuals of minor note contribute their money and their good wishes. "Truly," as the Pioneer says, "an outburst of enthusiasm so spontaneous, so genuine, so general, must have taken even those who knew the country best by surprise, for it is a manifestation certainly without parallel in the history of India." Russia has probably "reckoned without her host." With India ready as one man to fly at her throat, with the Colonies vying with each other in proffering their money, their thews and sinews, to the mother-country, Old England is no trifling adversary for the Colossus of the North, who will assuredly find that the British Lion has more fight in him than a well-advised Colossus would have cared to provoke.

WE are glad to see that the excellent custom, all too recently introduced, of arranging agreeable annual meetings for the Services, and European residents, of each Indian province, who may happen to be in London during the season, has not fallen into desuetude in the case of Assam, all gentlemen connected with which, and with the adjoining districts of Cachar and Sylhet, are invited to renew old alliances, and, let us hope, to form new ones, at the Holborn Restaurant on Eton Day, the 4th of June, when the Chief Commissioner, Mr. Elliott, is to preside. The Hon. Sec. of the gathering is C. Hudson, Esq., of 14, St. Mary Axe.

It has been well remarked that the songs of a people are the truest test of its disposition. Who can fail to remark the difference between the fire which the Beaconsfield Government infused into the nation, and which found its expression in the celebrated "Jingo" song, and the tame effusions now current as regards the all but certainly impending war? The present Administration have certainly done their utmost to crush out the Civis Romanus sum feeling from the breast of every Englishman, and to impress on him the conviction that he is despised and hated by all his schoolfellows in the European Academy. Yet is the old patriotic sentiment not wholly extinct. Witness the following:—"We," says the Globe of May 1, "are informed of a highly patriotic and self-sacrificing act on the part of Messrs. Ellis Lever and Co., coal-merchants, Manchester. Large orders for coal are being sent from Russia to England, and Messrs. Lever were invited to supply 20,000 tons of steam coal for immediate delivery at Russian ports. Mr. Lever, however, replied by declining to sell a ton of coal for Russia at the present time at any price. That is not the reply which the thrifty British merchant usually gives in such cases."

THE following is a more amusing, if less self-denying, instance of the same feeling:—

The Eastbourne correspondent of the Central News telegraphs:—The St. Petersburg Velocipede Association has just invited the Eastbourne United Bicycle Clubs to compete in a number of great races at St. Petersburg next month. The Sussex cyclists, in declining the honour, state, "If, however, you are thinking of holding any races near Herat this summer, we shall be glad of particulars, as many of our best men expect to be near that place in the course of a few weeks."

HOWEVER inadvisable it may be to embitter a "very pretty quarrel as it stands," we cannot but think that the allegation made by the correspondent of the Chronicle with Sir P. Lumsden deserves notice. It is scarcely conceivable that even a Russian officer could offer a reward for the head of an adversary without being cashiered on the spot. However, grattez le Russe, vous trouverez le Tartare.

"Further details have come to hand of the fighting on the Kushk on the 30th March, and the decided tendency of this later information is to place the action of the Russians in an infinitely worse light than did our previous knowledge of the incident.

"The fight, it is now certain, was of a very desperate character indeed, notwithstanding that the Afghans were so greatly outnumbered. What they lacked in numbers, however, they made up in bravery, fighting splendidly until the last, when the superior strength of the Russians compelled them to take to flight. The Afghan general set a worthy example to his troops, and was throughout in the fore-front of the fighting, being twice wounded.

"The treachery of the Russians; however, which forced the fighting, has created infinitely less excitement and indignation here than the report, which unfortunately there seems only too much reason to be true, that Colonel Alikhanoff, whether on his own account or acting for his superiors is not quite clear, caused a reward of one hundred tomans to be offered for the head of either of the British officers with the Afghan force at the time of the fighting."

THE less civilised a race, the more it delights in "tumashas;" or, as our French friends call them, "spectacles." We should not be at all surprised were the rumour of a "crowning" tumasha in Central Asia, announced in the subjoined extract, to turn out correct. It would presumably be a kind of tu quoque for the "Empress" of India were the Czar to be crowned "Emperor" of Central Asia.

A correspondent of the Daily News at Baku says:—There is a rumour, which I have heard from more than one source, that the Emperor of Russia will proceed to Samarkand some time within the next year or two, and there, in the ancient Palace of Timour Lung, be crowned "Emperor of Central Asia," or with some such title. It is intended that great state and importance will be given to the event.

WE can only support, hoping against hope, the efforts of our Indian contemporaries to call attention to the all but entirely defenceless state of our principal Indian ports. They have been scandalously neglected. Bombay, as usual, has come to the fore; and one of the first deputations which its new Governor, Lord Reay, had to receive, prominently brought to his notice the unprotected condition of this, the nearest to England of the Presidency ports, and the one through which, in case of a "scrimmage" with Russia, a very large proportion of the troops, and of their supplies, would necessarily pass. Calcutta might easily be rendered inaccessible to hostile cruisers by the simple measure of removing buoys and beacons. But, in these days of long-range cannon, the same cannot be said of Madras, not to speak of such important mercantile ports as Kurrachee and Rangoon. The resolution of the War Office to make the smallest possible number of guns, until the perfect gun shall have been invented (as if the science of artillery, like all others, were not, and would not forever be, progressive) has starved us, as regards means of defence, at home and abroad. The list of towns of importance, in England alone, which a gunboat, possessing a range of say three miles, could batter to pieces, or hold to ransom at an enormous rate, would, we think, be enough to appal even the fainéant Government which, for our sins, we are compelled to tolerate.

WE have the authority, whatever it may be worth, of the weekly paper England, in its issue of April 25, for a paragraph which will be suggestive enough. Se non è vero, è ben trovato.

Madame Novikoff stayed with Mr. Thistlethwayte, at the latter's house in Grosvenor-square, for some time before she left England. Mr. Gladstone called there daily.

THE Daily News reported from Cairo some days ago:—

Some anxiety is caused by the continued presence of a Russian transport in the Suez Canal. After passing through and being recalled, she now lies at Suez awaiting orders, but the exact object of her remaining there is difficult to explain.

We don't think the object "difficult to explain." Russia, whose adherence to treaties, engagements, agreements, or "arrangements," has never been remarkable, means to respect the Suez Canal just as long as suits her purpose. On the first sign of war, the "transport" will take the Canal (of course on its way to safety in the Black Sea), will conveniently sink in it, and the cargo will be found to be something weightier than human beings. The Government have been warned of this danger over and over again. Have they provided against it? Why do they not, in the present conjuncture, render themselves independent of the Canal, by bringing the Great Eastern, now rotting at her moorings at Sheerness, and which could be had for a mere trifle? She could be fitted in three weeks and carry 8,000 men to Bombay in four weeks more.

We are requested to state that it is important that all copies of the letter of thanks to our kindred who reside in the British Colonies for their patriotic offers of military aid to the mother country should at once be returned to the honorary secretary of the Royal Colonial Institute, No. 15, Strand.

"LADY DUFFERIN," says the Pioneer, "won golden opinions from the native officers at Rawalpindi at her garden party. Her ladyship went round, and was introduced first to the Goorkha officers, to whom she said how glad she was to meet them. They had heard of the Goorkhas in England and their splendid fighting powers, and she would write to the Queen, saying what fine, loyal soldiers the men of the Native Army were, and how anxious to show their loyalty. Her Excellency paid similar compliments to all the other native officers present, and their delight was unbounded, and equally that of the men, to whom her words were communicated."

The appointment of Mr. H. M. Durand to fill the position of Foreign Secretary to the Government of India, formerly held by his father, the late Sir H. M. Durand (who was killed by being crushed while passing on an elephant through a low archway at Tank), seems to have given general satisfaction, and was, indeed, pretty generally anticipated. It may safely be said to be, at this critical period, the most important appointment, next to those of the members of the Government, in all India; and we rejoice to think that it has now, as, with few exceptions, it always has been, filled by a thoroughly competent man. "It is superfluous," says the Pioneer, "to say that Mr. Durand is fitted for the post. The case is very much stronger than that. At the present time, when the relations between the Viceroy and his Foreign Secretary must be more than ever personal and intimate, it seems to us peculiarly fortunate that the latter should be a man with so great a faculty for inspiring confidence that he gained even that of so suspicious and secretive a mind as the late Viceroy. Of the Central Asian Question Mr. Durand has a knowledge that may be called hereditary, and it is very little of a secret that for a long time past in all business coming under this head his influence has gone for something much more than an under-secretary's. A long sojourn in Kabul, too, to say nothing of later experiences, have given him the personal acquaintance with the chief actors on the scene which diplomatic science values so high. Young in years, in counsel old, Mr. Durand has judgment and energy, patience and firmness, in a degree in which they are rarely combined. There are other names that could be mentioned, perhaps, with qualifications in some respects as great as his; but it is just the combination of qualities which makes Mr. Durand as safe as strong, that gives us reason to regard his appointment as a matter for public satisfaction.

should court rather than avoid criticism, which, when honest, it should welcome. Sure we are that our Indian papers—all praise to them for it—are by no means reticent in exposing the blunders of the authorities in British India. Mr. Grant Duff, in Madras, did indeed try to "snub" a journal (we think the Madras Mail) on one occasion, but came off, most deservedly, quite second-best in the conflict. It seems, however, that in Native States English papers have to be very mealy-mouthed when speaking of their "superiors." What will the advocates of a free Press, "Liberals" to a man, no doubt, say to the enclosed excerpt from the Pioneer?—

According to the Hyderabad Telegraph, the Deccan Times has been officially cautioned to be "more guarded and less vindictive" in its comments on Hyderabad political affairs.

"HERE are some facts," says the St. James's Gazette of April 29, "which at the present moment deserve careful consideration. Early in January last the Odessa Viestnik stated that the Russian Government had made arrangements with the Ameer for the occupation by the Czar's troops of Herat. In return for his complaisance, Abdur Rahman was to receive from Russia occult assistance which would enable him to extend his dominions southwards towards the Indus. He was also to receive more substantial remuneration in the shape of four batteries of Krupp guns, which had been specially ordered for him at Essen, and a present in cash of 2,500,000 roubles. Upon the strength of this agreement a Mission had been despatched to Herat from Tiflis, 'in order to prepare the Heratees for the proposed occupation.' The English papers paid no attention to these statements until the 21st of February, on which date the Daily Telegraph published an obscure allusion, by its Vienna correspondent, to what had been alleged by the Viestnik to have taken place some two months before. It is impossible to say whether the Russian mission had, in the meantime, reached Herat; but it is a significant fact that on the 26th of February the Veel stated that it had been ascertained that in Herat there was a strong party desirous of a Russian protectorate; and that, almost upon the same day, the Odessa Viestnik, returning to the subject, declared that there was a perfect understanding between Russia and the Ameer, and that Herat would, ere long, be "occupied by peaceful means." Since then we have learned that Abdur Rahman is opposed to allowing Anglo-Indian troops to enter his territories, and that "seven million roubles in gold have been sent to Central Asia" from St. Petersburg.

It is satisfactory at length to be assured that the "incident" of the scurrilous Franco-Egyptian newspaper, Bosphore Egyptian, which at one time threatened to embroil us with France, has come to an end; Nubar Pasha having made a formal visit of apology to the French representative, and his visit having been returned in due diplomatic form. But it is not surprising to read that the Vienna newspapers are very severe on what they call the incapacity of Lord Granville for having allowed a question so small to assume such large dimensions. One paper asks whether Lord Granville's past services are enough to justify a great nation committing its foreign affairs to his hands in face of the many and deplorable proofs which he has given of late of his incapacity to bring any business whatever to a quiet and successful issue.

THE London Gazette of 24th April contains a Treasury Warrant giving the Regulations for the Indian Parcel Post, which comes into force on the 1st of July next. The rates are from England to India 1s. per pound, and from India to England the equivalent, eight annas per pound. Prepayment in all cases is compulsory; the limit of weight is seven pounds, and the dimensions must not exceed in length three feet six inches, or in length and girth, measured together, six feet, such girth being measured round the thickest part of such parcel. All parcels must be accompanied by a declaration of contents and value.

PROFESSOR VAMBERY ON HERAT.

WE were glad to see the lower hall of Exeter Hall—the upper hall being occupied by one of the well-known “May meetings”—thronged by a distinguished and appreciative company to hear Professor Vambéry discourse on the vast importance of Herat. Wide as is the range of the Professor's knowledge, extensive and prolonged as have been his journeys in the East, and eventful as has been his whole career, few incidents of his life are better known than the adventures which befel him in that city.

Born in 1832, in the island of Schutt in Hungary, he early in life occupied the position of tutor to a family in his own country. By dint of rigid economy, while holding this post, he succeeded in laying by funds adequate to defray his college fees and his personal expenses on becoming a student, and employed his vacations in travelling, chiefly on foot, from town to town, frequenting the monasteries, and picking up the languages of the districts which he traversed. Friends, who had deservedly admired his undaunted energy and perseverance, enabled him to pay his first visit to that East on all subjects connected with which he is now, perhaps, the first living authority. Arriving at Constantinople almost penniless, the young traveller—he was but twenty years of age—succeeded in enlisting the active sympathies of a countryman (whose notice is said to have been attracted to him, in the first instance, by his wearing the Hungarian colours); and having obtained the post of tutor in a Turkish family, remained in Constantinople for some years, gradually becoming quite a Turk in appearance and manners. But a desire, natural to anyone who has once seen Oriental life, to see more, and yet more, of it, led the future Professor to visit Persia, to which end he attached himself to the caravans, which take numberless pilgrims to the many shrines, a visit to each of which is a most meritorious act, and worship at all—a feat probably performed by few, if any, pilgrims—would be equivalent to an exceptional advance on the road to Paradise.

While in Persia Vambéry so completely transformed himself into a darvish that his European nationality was never suspected by his fellow-darvishes; a suspicion even would probably have sacrificed his life. (It will be remembered that at Mecca Captain Burton, whose interesting book, “A Visit to Mecca and Medina,” will not soon be forgotten, had, in the same manner, to pose as a pilgrim, and that a late, so far as we know the last, European pilgrim to the same place is said to have had to shoot three fellow-pilgrims who had accused him of being a Kafr, in order to save his own life.) Loth to miss the opportunity of seeing shrines so important as those of Bokhara and Samarcand, the enterprising traveller crossed the great salt desert in a buffalo caravan, but got a severe stroke of heat apoplexy, which reduced him so far that he was thrown across a camel as being half dead.

On leaving Samarcand he quitted the company, though not abandoning the attire nor the manners of darvishes, and travelled through to Herat, which he did not reach till 1863, being then but thirty-one years of age, of which he had passed nearly a third in Oriental lands. On his arrival at Herat he found the place in ruins, consequent on its late siege. Yakooob Khan, now a state prisoner in India, then a lad of sixteen, had just been made governor of the town and district by his father, the late Shere Ali Khan.

The young Prince resided in Charbagh, the palace which Major Todd had occupied in 1840. Vambéry was disguised as a Darvish. True to his Darvish character, the Professor entered the presence of the young chief with the usual Mahomedan salutation. He was then invited to take a seat on the floor, and, having done so, proceeded to offer up in Arabic a prayer for the Sirdar's safety. The slight foreign accent of the European struck the ear of Yakooob Khan, and he exclaimed, “By God, you are an Englishman!” Then, springing from his chair, the young Sirdar placed himself before Vambéry, and, clapping both his hands like a child, said, “Tell me, are you an Englishman or not?” Vambéry did not lose his presence of mind, but, assuming a manner as if the jest had gone too far, exclaimed, “Sir, don't joke, you know the saying, ‘He who takes a believer for an unbeliever, even in sport, is himself an unbeliever.’” His serious look quite disconcerted the young Prince, and he apologised, saying that he had never seen a pilgrim of Islam with so English a countenance.

It may be imagined that every particular connected with a city in which he had run so great a risk was, irrespectively of all other considerations, indelibly impressed on the pilgrim's memory. And so it seemed on Friday. Though the paper was only read, and though all direct political allusions were avoided, it was impossible to mistake the enthusiasm of the lecturer or the intelligent sympathy of the audience, those passages being the most heartily cheered in which Russian “civilisation” was contrasted with that which England is gradually succeeding in introducing among the teeming populations of Hindostan, and in which the tu quoque was most tellingly administered, from an ethnographical point of view, to the Russian pretensions, it being irrefragably demonstrated that the population of the Herat province—including, of course, its component part, Badghis—is of a wholly different race to the Turkomans, whom the white Tzar claims as his subjects. “Nature herself,” averred the Professor, “had drawn the frontier; where Badghis ceased the sand region of the Turkoman steppe began.”

On the ground of the non-admission of political matter but two speakers were heard besides the Professor.

The usual vote of thanks, well-merited on all accounts, was moved by Sir Douglas Forsyth as Chairman. It was a happy coincidence that Sir Douglas should have presided. No better chairman could have been selected, seeing that to him are due, and that he could personally and authoritatively speak of, the negotiations which ended in the Granville-Gortschakoff "arrangement." We know, by recent experience, how Russia observes "arrangements" which declared Afghanistan to be wholly without the pale of Russian designs. He mentioned his own personal experiences when he traversed the frontier on his well-known mission to Yorkund in 1873, the Ameer's Minister having especially directed the traveller's attention to Penjdeh and Badghis as parts of Afghanistan which it would be his duty to visit, and spoke with ridicule of the pretension that, because the Turcomans occasionally cross the valley to pasture their flocks, the entire district was to be made over to them.

The venerable Lord Houghton drew, from all that had been said, the very sensible conclusion that Herat was not one of those parts of the world which could advantageously accept such civilisation as Russia had to offer.

The unanimity which prevailed, while rendering the lecturer's task an easy and agreeable one, tended to show the general consensus of opinion among those best qualified to express one—that Alexander the Great, in founding Herat, did "spot" a place of superlative importance, and was, after all, as the Professor said, "not such a bad politician."

PROFESSOR VAMBERY ON HERAT.

Professor Vambéry read a paper on Friday evening to a distinguished audience at Exeter Hall. Sir Douglas Forsyth presided. Professor Vambéry said that Herat was a place of unusual importance, agriculturally, commercially, ethnically, and strategically. He arrived in the city just after a siege of three years' duration, finding it a heap of ruins; but he soon had reason to agree that the statements of ancient geographers and of the modern inhabitants were not exaggerated. The soil of Herat was of incredible fertility, and of water there was abundance. The two principal rivers were the Murghab and the Heri Rood; the Tinghibab and the Kesbef Rood flowing into the latter, and the Kolari and the Kushk (which means dry, from its partly subterranean course) into the former. Such an abundance of water within a small territory was unique in Central Asia, Persia, Turkey, and Arabia, and had made it a jewel the possession of which had been coveted by every conqueror, as it was still coveted to-day. The great wealth of Herat explained why the Governors had, as a rule, soon been able to assert their independence. Under a European administration Herat might develop into a veritable gold-mine, now that marauding incursions from the north had been dammed by the position of Russia, and that the Badghis had a chance of flourishing anew and making the district the granary of Central Asia. The varied populations settled here in the course of history furnished the best means for a conqueror to gain a firm foothold. The whole population of Herat was about a million, consisting of a race physically and mentally strong, hating the Afghans and Persians, and whose loftiest ideal had always been the independence of Herat, and who might be transformed at small expense into an excellent militia and a reliable barrier against Persia and Afghanistan. In ancient times the commerce of India and China had reached the west by passing through Herat, and even now it was an emporium for the trade between the north and the south. Every conqueror of India had marshalled his armies in Herat to prepare them for the change of temperature in the southern latitudes; and it was to the present day the traditional highway to India, in preference to the route over the Hindoo Koosh. Every conqueror of India in coming from the north had secured Merv and the oasis on the lower course of the Murghab before proceeding to Herat, and Russia was now pursuing that identical policy. So far back as historical memory went the district of Badghis had always formed part of the province of Herat, and had never been presumed to be a part of either Merv or Meshed. Nature had herself drawn the frontier; for where Badghis ceased the sand region of the Turkoman Steppe began, and Penjdeh as well as Ak Robat were situated within the lines of the cultivated soil of the north-western offshoots of the Paropamisus. They belonged to Badghis, and were parts of the district of Herat. Herat being the "key to India," or the "gate of India," patriotic Englishmen saw in the advance of Russia to that part of Afghanistan an ever-present danger to the interests of their country. The two worlds met at the Oxus and the southern line of the Turkoman Steppe; therefore, the attack on Herat was an aggression on the Arian region of culture, and offensive not only to Englishmen, but to every friend of Western culture, and the forcible expression "Hands off" would be in the right place here.

Lecturing at Newcastle-on-Tyne on Saturday night on "Russia at the Gates of Herat," Professor Vambéry said that the two great influences in Central Asia were Russia and England. Although he admitted that Russian civilisation was far ahead of that of the races of Central Asia, it was far behind that of England. The question to be considered was whether they would favour the agency of England, which stood at the top, or that of Russia, which stood at the bottom of European civilisation. He was glad that the time had gone by when English statesmen would allow themselves to be deceived by the insidious methods of Russia, and although England seemed to have raised the envy of several European Powers, he believed that when they came to study the question impartially it would be impossible for them to do otherwise than favour the extension of English rather than Russian civilisation.

[Of the lecture delivered by Professor Vambéry at Willis's Rooms on Tuesday, under the auspices of the well-known "Constitutional Union," and of the subsequent discussion (politics not being, on this occasion, tabooed), we propose to give a report in our next issue, the discussion not having been concluded till just as we were going to Press.]

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE DIARY OF A CIVILIAN'S WIFE IN INDIA.*

It is no disparagement of an extremely readable book to say that, were it not known from the title-page that it is the handiwork of a lady, a glance at its contents would reveal the fact. The "chit-chat" of life is seldom safe in the keeping of the sterner sex, who for the most part regard the routine of daily existence in too severe an aspect to admit of the light and interesting treatment which it has received in the present volume. Skimming the surface of everyday "doings and sayings" the "Civilian's Wife" gives her readers something more than a glimpse of India in a style at once thoughtful and interesting; and, in addition to her other claims to consideration, it is no small matter in these days of "jelly-fish" literature, when the pole-star of the horizon of letters is "a large circulation and heavy profits," to find anyone rising beyond the consideration of mere catering for the public taste, and presuming to have the courage of his or her convictions. Fancy an author, and that author a lady herself, with a tiny one at her side, calmly questioning whether it is right to forbid infanticide in the East. However, on this point let Mrs. Moss King speak for herself. "The practical result of our legislation is that now an equal number of boy babies are destroyed in order to balance the proportion of male and female deaths. You cannot force parents to rear a child. You may prevent their killing it by an overdose of opium, because that can be detected and punished. But you cannot punish them when a child simply will not thrive, and after a few painful months dies 'a natural death.' This, therefore, is another result of our efforts, that the children die a death of suffering instead of a quick and unconscious one. As to the children themselves there can be small doubt that it is better for them to die as soon as born than to live to grow up and struggle, and finally die of starvation or lead a life of wickedness, and the one or the other lies before these girls as long as the country is overpopulated." Scarcely less alarming are the views propounded that famines ought to be allowed to take their course as "Nature's way of adjusting the balance between food and population." Had Mrs. King not been born into the world too late she might have won the heart and perhaps the hand of Malthus, and enjoyed a share of the renown attaching to the Apostle of views which are summed up in the trite expression, "the survival of the fittest." But if in this direction somewhat daring doctrines are propounded, it is at least reassuring to learn, on the authority of Mrs. King's "ayah" (nurse), that should the Russians come to India "every man would leave his home and his wife and his children and would go out to fight them." Perhaps, however, the value of this statement will be lessened by the circumstance that the intelligence of the speaker must be measured by her persistent attempts to button her master's boots with a corkscrew. Let it not, however, be supposed from this novel endeavour to turn everything to account that the natives of India are of weak intellect or deficient understanding. "You should stain your face brown and then you would get anything you want," was the shrewd and perceptive rejoinder of a dark-skinned "brother," to whom an English officer had complained that the European colour of his skin was no passport to either courtesy or consideration. Of course, Mrs. King being at one time in her travels in the neighbourhood of Agra, went to see the Taj Mahal erected by Emperor Shah Jahan to perpetuate the memory of his beloved spouse. The romance of their lives has found a fitting sequel in the romance of their tomb of spotless whiteness at the end of an avenue of shrubs and cypresses. It is quaintly but aptly described by the "Civilian's Wife" as "the most touchingly beautiful building in the world, the spirit of Handel's 'Comfort ye' embodied in marble. There is a sense of something beyond this world in both."

Railway hotels in the East, at least at Sabaranpur, do not seem to vie with their "companions in arms" in the West, as though they supply endless dishes of varying badness, they seem to think more of quantity than quality. Imagine, then, the mortification of the "Mem Sahib," when, on one occasion, asking for some jelly in place of pudding, which latter was conspicuous for its absence, to find placed before her with solemn suavity a pan dish filled with currant jelly. They do dabble in sweets in India, for amongst the various trades of the country, such as "Eggsmen," "Dressmakers of gents and ladies," "Moderate price shop," is recorded an enterprising maker of "Sweeties and Jams."

In common with all other thoughtful travellers Mrs. King laments the decadence of art in India, owing to the substitution of European ideas and patterns, a prostitution of intelligence and skill which, however, cannot be laid to the charge of the wood-carvers of Ahmedabad, who still produce in the quaint, but unrivalled grandeur of simplicity, articles fitted to adorn the proudest mansion of England's proudest nobles.

It would be easy to multiply amusing incidents and strange experiences. Here a man is cured by the simple expedient of swallowing the paper in which the medicine is wrapped; there we are introduced to a flock of myriads of parakeets, all roosting head downwards; here an elephant is judicially sentenced to death for man-killing propensities; there a friend of the same race is decked in joyous splendour with a candelabrum, shade and all complete, screwed on to his trunk; here we find a traveller journeying for yards at a stretch straddling a pony one leg in safety and security, while the other is dangling down a precipice which dazzles the eye and giddies the brain; there a fortunate family are comfortably esconced on the hills, overlooking in happy enjoyment the burning plains at their feet, like the blessed in Paradise, whose pleasures are heightened, according to the assurance of Muhammad, by the contemplation of the sufferings of their brethren in the land where the Lord hath forgotten to be merciful.

With one word of praise—the highest praise—for the pictures, we take our leave of Mrs. King, hoping to meet again when next she essays to "chit-chat" with her public admirers.

"PRIMUS IN INDIS."*

The title of "Romance" chosen by Mrs. Colquhoun fitly describes the tale which she has given to the public; it can scarcely be termed a novel, as it does not do more than record the "fleeing visions" of the hero, without any attempt at delineation of character or portrayal of passions; but regarded from a romantic point of view, "Primus in Indis" is entitled to no stinted modicum of praise. The tale opens in Gloucestershire towards the middle of the last century, the hero being a young squire, who, shortly after attaining man's estate, quarrelled with his father, or, perhaps, it would be nearer the truth to say whose father quarrelled with him. Up to this period the youth had done no more than many warm-hearted striplings of his day had done before him, viz., intrigue for the restoration of the house of Stuart to the throne of England. None the less, while endeavouring to promote the cause of the young pretender he had chanced to alight upon a bewitching damsel, with whom, of course, he fell desperately in love. But now, ejected from the home of his ancestors, and attainted as a traitor, he betakes himself to the metropolis, only to remain there a short time till his slender resources came to an end, when, accepting the "king's shilling," he is sent out to India as a recruit in the British army. Then follows a singular and almost bewildering array of adventures and surprises. Equally, of course, as before, the fair ladylove "happens" to be in the same land of Ind. It will be recollected that at this time the French had a strong hold in the East, and native opinion halted between the choice, as "advisers, counsellors, and friends," of, on the one hand, the Hon. East India Company, whose "one general" was the renowned Clive—on the other, the Gallic troops, under the leadership of the equally famous M. Duplex and his scarcely less celebrated lieutenant, M. Law. What happens to our hero the reader must learn for himself. It will suffice to say that the liveliest imagination can scarce picture more numerous perplexities or more exciting adventures. At one time he is an honoured guest, filled with ambition and day-dreams of wealth and fame; on another occasion he is in prison, the chalice of hope dashed from his lips, with nothing but misery, and perhaps death, staring him in the face. But, while meditating in his lonely cell upon the strange vicissitudes of a strange career, the sound of distant guns betokened the commencement of the "siege of Calcutta by Suraj-ud-daula, at the instigation, and under the direction, of the French. Thereupon the prison doors clanked, and the young squire was led forth, musket in hand, to lend his assistance. The result is matter of history. The city fell into the hands of the enemy, and the "pedling company of merchants" were well-nigh extirpated by that portion of the Empire. The tragic butchery of the Black Hole at Calcutta, when 146 souls were crammed into a small room a few feet square, and this on a close sultry night in Bengal, is familiar to everyone, but its details, well narrated as the story is by Mrs. Colquhoun, even after the lapse of more than a century, cannot fail to send a thrill of horror through the human bosom. Revenge was, however, at hand; despite the gloomy forebodings of some craven minds, despite the intoxication of success, which in the East is an all-powerful factor in the problem of war, our intrepid hero rose superior to the prognostication of defeat which showered down upon him in well-nigh every quarter. Clive, and Clive alone, counselled vigorous action. Destiny decreed that the battle of Plassey in a brief space of time should proclaim to the astonished Natives that England was only slattered, not crushed. The genius of one mind had placed at the feet of his conquering nation the sunny plains of Bengal and laid the foundation of Britain's splendid Empire in Hindustan.

This and much more is told in "Primus in Indis." The interest never for a moment flags, not being, as is sometimes the case, concentrated upon one solitary and prominent figure to the exclusion of minor and less important characters. Mrs. Colquhoun must be congratulated upon having produced a thoroughly readable "romance" anent a period of England's history, which can never fail to raise a blush of pride, and the recollection of which may in the future inspire England's youth to emulate the deeds of their predecessors. The motto of India is unmistakable—"Go thou and do likewise."

Chit Chat.

WHAT a melange of nationalities there will be if England, in the event of war with Russia, draws her supplies of men from all her Colonies and subjects. There will be, to quote the amusing language of the Pioneer, "Colonists from Australia and Sikhs from India. We have enlisted no Fijians yet, and the Aborigines of Borneo may still be drawn upon for light infantry, Bushmen with blow-pipes, and a buffalo corps of North American Indians, with some pigtailed Chinese from Hong Kong, and a troop of Maories mounted on kangaroos—all these yet remain."

FUNNY things are done under the guise of red tape. Fancy Bengal subalterns who speak Hindustani being posted to the Madras Sappers, which latter express themselves in Tamil! What a confused jargon of sounds a parade day must bring forth!

"ONE touch of nature makes the whole world kin." The scene is a roadside station on the Jabalpur Section of the East Indian Railway. The Viceroy of India, the mighty potentate whose nod can make or unmake princes, on alighting from his carriage, enters into conversation with the wife of a humble railway employé, who, with her little child, had strolled on the platform to see the "great Sahib." Little deeds oftentimes betoken great minds.

THE benighted city of Madras seems alive to the crisis. After appealing to his fellow-countrymen to form a volunteer corps at their own expense, as a means of rendering substantial aid in the defence of the country, a patriotic Madrasian concludes an appeal in these words:—"Stir yourselves up, therefore, patriots. Do what lies in your individual selves. Lovers, as you are, of our country, I am confident that you will respond to my humble appeal, and convene public meetings to concert measures for this purpose. If, from the richest Maharajah down to the humblest ryot, every one set apart a month's income, he would have done no more than what his country can expect of him." Rather rough, this, upon misers.

THE change of front on the part of the Pall Mall Gazette, which, at one time, when advocating the extension and increase of the British Navy, seemed within sight of its goal as an exponent and leader of public opinion, has not escaped notice in the Indian Press, who view that M. Lessar's English organ has taken up a "low and a too unjustly complaisant tone regarding the Afghan Boundary," and has made a deliberate "attempt not only to mislead the public, but an attempt so to influence the authorities as to make it likely that our preparations for immediate war might be slackened, if not stopped." If the charge be true, how about patriotism?

THE experience of the Madras Cathedral is that the one mean which never fails of extracting coin from a reluctant and unwilling congregation is to play the Hallelujah Chorus. This magnificent composition always softens the heart and opens the pockets. What a valuable hint for our clerical friends on this side of the water!

* "Primus in Indis," a Romance, by W. J. Colquhoun. London: Chapman and Hall, 1885.

WONDERS never will cease. A new cart has been invented in India which is so nicely balanced that when going down hill a turn of the crank raises the shafts, and with them the horse, who is then suspended in mid-air, taking a rest till level ground is once more reached. If the horse attempts to run away the friendly crank is once more brought into requisition, and the recalcitrant quadruped moves its legs between heaven and earth. This is what St. Paul calls "beating the air."

To pass a lifetime in the East, working and labouring diligently in the sphere of life allotted to one on the world's stage, never to postpone public to personal interests, nor swerve a hair's-breadth from a rigid line of purpose; to do all this, and to find that on leaving the country at the end of a career you are keenly regretted, and depart with a host of friends and not one single enemy—this is a reward not given to every man. Such has been the fortunate experience of Mr. Bazett Colvin.

FURLOUGHS.

MADDEN, Major J. M., General List, infantry, cantonment magistrate, Ahmedabad, to Europe for one year, on medical certificate.

MARRYAT, Major E. L., R.E., for one year, on private affairs, in extension.

MACKENZIE, Captain S., Sind Volunteer Rifle Corps, for twelve months, from April 30.

THE recent failures in Rangoon have put an end, in a great measure, to the ruinous credit system which prevailed there to such an enormous extent. A correspondent of an up-country paper says that many merchants now sell only for cash. One insolvent's shop goods had been selling for cash at a discount of thirty-three per cent. for some days, and then at fifty per cent. off, with a result that in a fortnight some Rs. 15,000 have been collected. Another firm which recently started on the cash system has had to extend its premises, and now is patronised by most of the messes and railway staff, paying for rent of a shop monthly Rs. 300. Good has thus arisen out of evil, and if speculation is curtailed the business done, which is still considerable, will be established on a healthier basis than has hitherto existed.

Miscellaneous.

THE Pioneer, speaking of the absorbing topic of the day, opportunely reminds us that "as the winter passes away, and the weather becomes more favourable in Central Asian regions, the march of Russian forces towards Afghanistan may become more active; while the heat in the Bolan would render a counter-movement from the side of India almost impracticable; and refers with evident approval to the timely movement of troops to "the delightful climate of the Pishin plateau" as a proof that the present Viceroy is "not to be caught napping."

CONSEQUENT on the appointment of Captain Gilchrist as military secretary to the Resident, Captain Mason, 2nd Cavalry, has been appointed to the 1st Cavalry, Hingoli, as second in command. Lieutenant Maguire officiates as second in command 2nd Cavalry H.C. at Aurangabad. Lieutenant McSwiney having been transferred to the 3rd Cavalry at Bolarum, Lieutenant Purdon of the 4th becomes wing officer of the 6th Infantry at Raichore. The Resident has authorised the treasury officer at Hyderabad to exchange Government for Halli Sica rupees and vice versa at the assay rate of H.S. Rs. 116-14-16 per 100 Government rupees to all military officers when leaving Secunderabad, Trimulgherry or Bolarum. Lieutenant Shakespeare is, pro tem., second in command 1st Infantry H.C., and Lieutenant Whittall, the adjutant.

SURGEON-GENERAL W. R. CORNISH, C.I.E., has left Madras in the Mirzapore, and he will retire next June from the service, which holds him in none but the highest esteem. "India has treated him well," says a local paper. "He goes home with the relative rank, but with much more than the relative pension, of a major-general, looking rather like the average of healthy men at home when they are just on the turn of the half-century than the veteran he is. He has had an uninterruptedly successful career, and he has at all times been regarded as an honest man, with the courage of his convictions, who said what he thought, neither more nor less. He has now brought his Indian career to a close, but we may reasonably expect to hear that his value as a specialist in Indian sanitary science will not go unrecognised in England."

A WELL-ATTENDED meeting was held on April 13, in the offices of King, King and Co., to take the necessary steps for the formation of a mounted infantry company. The Hon. L. H. Bayley, who was elected to the chair, opened the proceedings in a brief speech, in which he referred to the mounted infantry corps in Calcutta, which was a great success, and said he was one who believed Bombay was in no way inferior to Calcutta. The following proposition was unanimously agreed to:—"That in the opinion of this meeting it is desirable that application should at once be submitted to Government for sanction to form a company composed of Volunteer Mounted Rifles, and for such State aid as it may be customary to give." The following gentlemen were requested to act as a provisional committee to communicate with Government on the subject:—The Hon. L. H. Bayley, Messrs. G. W. Moir, H. R. King, F. A. Little, R. Roberts, L. W. Rivett-Carnac, S. Newcome Fox, A. Arthur, J. L. Symons, R. L. Stewart, W. H. Buckland, and T. W. Cuffe.

A GOOD deal of ill-feeling has been created by the appointment of Deputy Surgeon-General B. Simpson to succeed Surgeon-General Cunningham as surgeon-general and sanitary commissioner with the Government of India; and, however competent Dr. Simpson may be, his appointment must be admitted to involve a supersession of Dr. Payne, the manner of which must be as painful to that officer as the matter, the snub having been publicly announced during the Viceroyalty of Lord Ripon, while the vacancy was known not to be likely to occur till after his departure.

A CURIOUS instance of the operation of the law of imprisonment for debt now existing in India is afforded by the case of the son of the Thakore of Palitana, who was taken in execution and committed to jail for a debt of some two lakhs. The decree was reversed by the Appellate Court, and the defendant, of course, released, but not until after some months' incarceration. A case in which a man, admitted to be free of all liability, suffers a long imprisonment for a debt which he does not owe, and yet has no remedy against anybody, must be allowed to be a hard one.

THE

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to

No. 6, LANCASTER PLACE, STRAND, W.C.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pearls and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880. To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.C.

WE have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.C.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MAY 12, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

THE last news of the week will be found in Mr. Gladstone's speech of yesterday, which we give in extenso under "Parliament." Some frontier as yet unrevealed, but stated to be satisfactory to our Government, to the Viceroy of India, to the Ameer of Cabul, and to the Russians, has, it seems, been agreed on. The country will, we think, hardly be reassured by the fact that this "agreement," "arrangement," or what not, is the outcome of a conference in which the senile Lord Granville (whose inability to conduct any affair whatever to a successful issue has for months made him the laughing-stock of Europe) and Lord Hartington, who is not supposed to be very deeply versed in the wiles of diplomacy, were pitted against the vigorous and astute intellects of such men as MM. de Staal and Lessar.

As a specimen—perhaps not a wholly unfair one—of native opinion, we subjoin a letter purporting to proceed from "A Village Mahratti Schoolmaster" (his English might be improved), which appears in the Times of India. Speaking of the late Conference at Rawul Pindi, he says:—

I all along suspected that the Ameer is decidedly in collusion with the Russians. The game is simply to gull the British Government. John Bull is always gullible. He is always inferior to Asiatic ways of diplomacy, I almost said rascality. The present intention is obvious, to scare England, with a make-belief that Russia is about invading India in the seizure of Afghan territory. This is all flam: the object is to obtain for the Ameer money, arms, ammunition, ad infinitum; and Russia to receive, as her share of the spoil, portions of far away useless territory, beyond Herat, of which the Ameer could never manage properly, on the pretence, if she would do a fight for it with the Ameer's troops, so as to make it a reality as much as possible, so much the better, otherwise, what does the Ameer mean, in his objections to friendly British troops in his territories. We natives of India have our own ways of thought. I may be wrong in sending you this native sided view of the question, but please bear it in mind in the coming events, which are likely to result during the next six months or so.

WE are truly glad to see that there is at length a prospect of the extension of the important harbour at Karachi. The Government of Bombay have recommended that of India to advance for this most desirable object 7½ lakhs at 4½ per cent., and the latter authority is stated to be willing to make the proposed advance, repayable in thirty years. Not, assuredly, before it was wanted.

WE commend to the notice of our readers the following extracts from native journals:—

The Indian Spectator says:—The splendid offers of co-operation received by the British Government from their great feudatories in India seem to have startled the Russian authorities, who expected native princes to stand aloof in the coming struggle, if not actually to go over to the invader. It is a very bitter fact that they have learnt, and they are now consoling themselves with the belief that the offers are more or less hollow, made possibly to convince Russia of England's hold on her Eastern Dependency. What do they say, then, to the offer of Independent Nepal? Nepal is ready with 15,000 Goorkhas at the service of the British Government and a free pass for recruiting purposes. Surely this is the time when that Power could have best stood apart if so inclined? But as a matter of course the popularity of the British rule is firmly established in Asia, and the confidence inspired by its purity of intentions, however short its acts may now and then fall to those intentions, is so deep that all the great Powers moving together could not shake it for an hour. The representatives of the British Government in this country are false to their imperial instincts when they hesitate to utilize the enthusiastic devotion that is being poured out by the subject races.

The Bangabasi says:—If Russia does not give up her claims on the disputed territory, the English will have to go to war. If she does, then the people of Central Asia will call her cowardly and imbecile, and Russia will not be able to bear indignities of that nature. The dispute between Russia and England is not for an ordinary bit of land. The question is as to who shall be the ruler of Central Asia and the future Emperor of India. The time is very critical. He who retraces one step will lose caste for ever, and he who advances a step will probably be destined to be the ruler of Asia. At this critical moment both races have become excited. How can an amicable settlement be made now? If war does not break out to-day, within a few days, both races will surely have to dance in the battle-field in Central Asia.

As our readers are aware, there has for some little time past been a certain uneasiness respecting the conduct of the Maharajah of Kashmir, and it is, considering the important position which his territories occupy, very gratifying to learn, on the authority of the Times of India, that this potentate's interviews with the Viceroy have been "most satisfactory in their results."

WE have at or near Suakim some 15,000 troops, with the usual corollary of many general officers, and with the invariable one of Mr. Gladstone's only general. They have cut up some Hadendawas, and the Hadendawas, en revanche, "have again (May 7) torn up the railway and the telegraph poles." We have advanced a few miles, lost many camels, and not a few men. And for what? If this can be by a perverted brain be thought magnifique, certainly ce n'est pas la guerre in any rational sense.

THE effect on domestic economy of the last European war in which we were engaged (and that, oddly enough, with Russia) is assuredly enough to give one pause in again declaring it were it not for the far greater effect which it would have on our antagonists. How would the average British materfamilias like to see some eighty per cent. added to her present expenses?

The effect our last great war with Russia had on the purchase value of money may be seen from the following table, showing the quantities of flour, beef, mutton, and coal to be obtained for twenty shillings:—

	lbs.	lbs.	lbs.	lbs.
1850, at peace	190	93	32	280
1855, at war	103	42	23	215

It will be seen by the above that bread, meat, and coal went up to nearly double their price, whilst many well remember that other necessities also advanced considerably in price.

But, per contra, look at Russia. It is not so long since the Tiflis correspondent of the pro-Russian Daily News reported a conversation which is interesting enough, not only in itself, but for the incidental remarks on the value of the Russian forced paper currency, which we subjoin:—

In the train, coming here from Baku, one gentleman in the compartment beside me, on learning my nationality, asked if the English would go to war with Russia. The reply was as to whether he thought the Russians meant to force on a war with England. My friend on further conversation developed his views, which were, that the Russians had now got the position in Turkestan, they were making a railway from Askabad to Sarakhs, and they could do as they liked. Herat could be taken whenever it was wanted. "You English," he said, "have a great commerce, you have a fleet,

But you have no soldiers and no allies, and can do nothing." On asking this gentleman what effect he thought a war with England would have on Russian credit he said that was nothing. "Paper money is sufficient," was his remark. I had pointed out that a week before I had received 7 roubles 70 kopecks for a gold imperial (there are 100 kopecks to the rouble), and that at the Baku railway station that day I had the imperial valued at 7 roubles 80 kopecks, this being the result of the engagement between the Russians and Afghans near to Penjdeh. In spite of victory the Russian paper money has fallen in value. Yesterday, in Tiflis, the fall was still greater, and the imperial was worth 8 roubles 20 kopecks. If a victory to Russian arms can do this, what would a defeat do? The paper rouble may, in a figurative sense, be said to be a vulnerable point, which extends all along the Russian frontier; and through this weak link in the defensive armour the British Government need have no difficulty in acquiring what they have a just right to on the Afghan boundary.

To the financial condition of the overgrown Empire we shall probably revert more at length on a future occasion; meanwhile, we submit to our readers the following figures, the significance of which it is impossible to misapprehend:—

"Can Russia," says an American paper, "solve the problem of a bankrupt nation making successful war against a rich and in other respects equally powerful rival? Russia's total debt at the opening of 1880 (later figures are not given) was £640,116,030, and there is no reason to suppose it has been reduced a kopeck since then. At the same time, while the monetary system of the country was supposed to have a silver basis, over £210,000,000 of paper money, representing a shrinkage of 35 per cent. on the par value, had been forced into circulation. The value of this inflated currency is smaller now than it was then, but the volume has not decreased. The gold mines of the country yield about £10,000,000 a year, but little of it remains at home, notwithstanding Government precautions to keep it there, and almost the only gold payments made in Russia are the customs duties. The half-imperial, a gold coin with an intrinsic value of about 16s. 8d., is quoted at £1 5s. 8d., all banking is done on the most crude and expensive principles; the quotation of foreign funds at St. Petersburg is forbidden, as comparisons with the value of home funds would be embarrassing; and rumours of crises at various commercial centres prevail. The financial stress of France just before the revolution was probably greater, but it is doubtful if there was ever anything more rotten in Denmark than Russia's finances at the present time."

How comes it, has been most properly asked, that at Pul-i-Khristi the Afghan soldiers had only muzzle-loading guns with which to withstand the rifles of their opponents? We have been supplying the Ameer with arms and ammunition as well as a handsome subsidy for some years past. If the only use he makes of these supplies is to hoard them up, and to leave his border troops in a practically defenceless condition, we might as well save ourselves the unnecessary expense at once.

LORD DUFFERIN, in the midst of all the serious business and worry entailed by the crisis, still found time to telegraph instructions as to the illumination of his estate in Ireland on the occasion of the Royal visit. The essence of diplomacy is never to forget, and assuredly Lord Dufferin has observed this golden rule.

A PAPER was read on Friday last before the Indian Section of the Society of Arts by Surgeon-Major Pringle, M.D., late of Her Majesty's Bengal Army, on "Ancient and Modern Methods of Treating Smallpox Epidemics in India." Mr. R. Brudenell Carter, F.R.C.S., presided, in the absence of Sir Cunliffe Owen, who was to have taken the chair. Dr. Pringle's paper consisted mainly of a description of the practice and beneficial results of the ancient system of inoculation, which was the means used in ancient times in the Himalayas to limit the ravages of smallpox, by the production of a mild type of the disease. The remainder of the paper gave an account of the success which had attended the lecturer's own efforts to introduce vaccination into the North-West Provinces. A discussion followed, and the meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the lecturer, whose personal experiences gave his paper an interest, independent of that which the subject was calculated to excite.

It has astonished every one (and we are glad to see Sir A. H. Layard—himself the best Ambassador—the persona gratissima—we have had at Constantinople ever since the death of the great Eltchi, calling attention to the fact) that, during the whole of a most important negotiation, involving peace or war between England and Russia, and in which the attitude of Turkey was a primary factor, we have been represented at the Porte by a Chargé d'Affaires. Indeed, the so-called Liberals seem to have a special veille for the absence of a real live Ambassador from the Court of the unspeakable Turk. When the Crimean War broke out, the authoritative representation of the country, which can be secured by an Ambassador alone, was wanting (though the locum tenens, Colonel Rose, afterwards Lord Strathairn, was competent enough, and, indeed, commenced the war by ordering the British Fleet to the Dardanelles). We say that England can be properly represented by an Ambassador alone, because, unless we are much misinformed, the etiquette obtaining at the Porte allows no one but an Ambassador to claim, if not by right, at all events by prescription, an audience of the Sultan; a privilege the importance of which, at an Oriental Court, where the most important political resolves are often the work of a few minutes, can scarce be overrated. We have always had our doubts how far it was wise to displace Mr. Wyndham, who had so long been entrusted with our interests at Constantinople, and who must, in some degree, have got the threads of the innumerable Palace and other intrigues which inscrutably sway the political action of Turkey. The change looked too much like the proverbial "swopping horses while crossing a stream." It is, therefore, with the greater pleasure that we give publicity to the subjoined remarks, communicated to a contemporary by no less an authority than Mr. Ralston:—"May I be allowed," says that gentleman, "respectfully to congratulate the Foreign Office on the excellent choice it has made in sending Sir W. White, pending the arrival of the new Ambassador, to Constantinople. It is doubtful whether any diplomatist now living knows the state of affairs in Eastern Europe better than he does. Only a few days ago the accomplished wife of an envoy from one of the Slavonic States told me that she had never in all her experience met but one person whose knowledge of the Eastern question equalled that of Sir William White. It may be worth mentioning that one day at Posen, in 1863, during the Polish insurrection of that year, the Countess Dziallinska said to me, 'Does Mr. White (then British Vice-Consul at Warsaw) speak good English?' Seeing that her question puzzled me, she added: 'He speaks Polish so perfectly, that we thought, perhaps, his English was feeble.' But it is not only Polish which is familiar to him. Besides the ordinary languages of diplomacy, he is well acquainted with Russian, Servian, and Roumanian. On the keenness of his intellectual vision, and the honest strength of his character, I need not dwell. They are well known to, and appreciated by, his official chiefs."

We have always heard of "wars and rumours of wars" as prognosticating the end of the world, and not long since we had a venerable lady's prophecy that,

"When Christ shall lie in our Lady's lap, England shall meet a great mishap."

Easter fell on March 25 (Lady-Day, as our rent-books tell us) two years ago; but no—we were going to say no mishap happened, though can there be a greater than that Mr. Gladstone should be Prime Minister?—no immediate crash occurred. Will old Nostradamus's subjoined prediction be equally resultless? Oh, that Dr. Cumming, who foretold the end of the world for each of so many successive years—and yet the world survived him—were here!

Mrs. Burton writes from Trieste to the Tablet to draw attention to the following prophecy written by Nostradamus in 1566:—

"Quand Georges Dieu crucifera,
Que Marc le ressuscitera,
Et que Sant Joan le portera,
La fin du monde arrivera."

In 1886 St. George comes on Good Friday; St. Mark on Easter Sunday; and St. John on Corpus Christi. The prophecy will thus be fulfilled as to conditions. Many, no doubt, will be curious to see whether it will also be fulfilled in fact.

We can scarcely credit that our Government have sunk so low as to justify the report which has reached the Morning Post, and we trust that some member of Parliament will consider it his duty to "interpellate" Mr. Gladstone on the subject. We must, indeed, under this Government, have reached a bathos of degradation if we are to submit to dictation from the Russian, or any other, nation as to what coaling stations we are to occupy. It is enough to make an Englishman's blood boil to see his nation thus snubbed by a half-civilized race:—

Our Berlin correspondent informs us that the Russian Government made it one of the conditions for the resumption of negotiations that Port Hamilton should not be occupied by Great Britain.

It seems, moreover, that the Autocrat of all the Russias is to assume the power of prohibiting us from fulfilling treaties or "arrangements" made with our own allies, provided they do not meet his approval.

We understand that another condition was imposed. It was to the effect that the Indian Government should receive instructions not to despatch arms and ammunition to the Ameer.

What will Lord Dufferin say to his engagements being thus set aside? We do not believe that the Ministry would long survive his resignation, which, it is understood, he has threatened, in the event of further concessions being made to Russia. Yet that resignation the Cabinet seem to be doing their best to bring about. We should, in such a case, doubtless hear Mr. Gladstone thundering against Lord Dufferin, as he did against his own former colleague, Sir H. Layard, and with as little reason.

It is not to be forgotten by those who, to use a west-country saying, can "look further than the doorway," that the position of the Ameer of Afghanistan is really a difficult one. The Russians press him on the Herat side; and as the subjoined extracts adumbrate, also from the side of Balkh, whence we suspect that Moltke would deliver the real assault, were his opinion asked, as it probably has been. Abdur Rahman is thus, even as regards the Russians, "in a cleft stick!" while we press him from the East. Who would be Ameer of Afghanistan? We have heard of Nolo episcopari; let us now say Nolo Ameerari.

A good many discoveries as to the true nature of the Russian positions in Central Asia are being made, now that it is almost too late to take measures to defend the threatened points. Hear the Daily News:—"The full development of the Russo-Afghan question will develop itself as soon as Balkh is actually threatened from Samarkand; and it would seem as if that development were within measurable distance. A few minutes' study of the map will enable any one to understand that the danger which threatens Cabul from the north is as great as that which threatens Herat from Merv and Sarakhs."

Again we read:—

Advices from Cabul received in Vienna state that the Ameer has received a letter from a high personage in Bokhara, containing the following passages:—"If you really go to war against Russia you must be cautious, so that the Muscovs do not entice you into a trap. I know for certain that the Russians, although they are directing large masses of troops towards Herat, will not go beyond that city. There they will accumulate their forces to draw on the English and Afghan armies to the walls of Herat. While you with the English attempt to drive the Russians out of Herat, a Russian army drawn up near Samarkand will cross Bokhara and the Amou Daria and advance to Balkh, to proclaim as Ameer your cousin, Achmed Ayoub. The Russians hope thereby to provoke a revolution in Afghanistan. When the revolt has reached Herat, the gates of Cabul will be closed to you, and the gates of Candahar to the English. Divide your troops between Herat and Cabul in order not to risk the loss of your throne. I repeat that the Russians will not go beyond Herat."

"A Native Scrutator" put things neatly: "The whole nation knows its duty clearly enough." This is with reference to the Russian embroglio. "No leading is necessary, only there should be no misleading." We commend this to the notice of the Pall Mall Gazette.

GENERAL KOMAROFF AND COLONEL ALIKANOFF.

We extract from The Times the following:—

"Lieutenant General Komaroff the Third" is one of four brothers who have all been in the military service. It is the custom in the Russian army to distinguish several brothers holding high positions by attaching the numerals to their names. An elder brother of the present Transcaspian commander-in-chief was Major-General Komaroff, the commander of the Grenadier Division of the Caucasus in the last Russo-Turkish campaign in Asia Minor, who died of wounds received in the disaster at Zevin. Another brother, also Major-General, Constantin V. Komaroff, was in command of the Ardahan detachment on the frontier during the same war, and afterwards became governor of Batoum, and is now governor of the citadel of Ivangorod. A third brother is the well known V. V. Komaroff, chief of General Tcherniaieff's staff in the Serbo-Turkish war, who, now having retired from the army, is devoting himself to journalism as editor of the Svieti in St. Petersburg. Lieutenant General Alexander Komaroff, "the conqueror of the Afghans," as he is already called here, after the fight at Penjdeh on the 30th ult., took no part in the Russo-Turkish campaign in 1877-78. He was engaged in various expeditions against the Caucasian mountaineers. Previous to receiving his present appointment of commander-in-chief of the Transcaspian, he was chief of the national-military administration in the Caucasus, and afterwards commander of the 21st Division of infantry. He is at present past 50 years of age, and enjoys the reputation of a good administrator rather than that of a dashing military leader.

According to a biographical notice which has been published of this officer, it appears that after the taking of Ardaghan, during the late Russian-Turkish war, that place was left in charge of a detachment under his command. The detachment had to defend a large extent of territory, to watch the Russian frontier, and to protect the flank and rear of that part of the Russian army which was then besieging Kars. When a diversion was made towards Erzeroum Komaroff's flying detachment made a detour in the direction of Olta. On the 20th of May the colonel, with a portion of his detachment, came out of Ardaghan, and two days later, with conspicuous bravery, surprised a portion of the Turkish army, which was stationed near the town of Olta and the defile of Penyak, in the southern pass of the Sagonloog chain of mountains, in order to seize the first opportunity which might present itself of retaking Ardaghan. By this bold move, Colonel Komaroff obtained a booty of 2,000 rifles and 500,000 cartridges.

Later, when the war in Asia Minor became concentrated near the Aladzjin heights, where Mukhtar Pasha was encamped, Colonel Komaroff joined his detachment to the main Russian army. There, on two occasions, he led an attacking column with consummate bravery, in both instances showed considerable military talent, and remained in the thickest of the fight during the whole time each struggle lasted. On the 6th of August his detachment had a most severe encounter with the Turks, but with undaunted stubbornness he kept his ground, in spite of the overwhelming force of the enemy, until reserves came to his assistance. In the unfortunate affair of the 13th of August, when the Turks made a night attack upon the Russians, it was the column of Komaroff—now a general—which prevented disaster to the Russian arms. On that occasion he was wounded, although the ball did not touch any vital part, rather severely. Finally, he took part in the storming of Kars, where he again led a column to the attack, and by his conspicuous gallantry greatly contributed to the success of the Russians upon that memorable occasion.

After the war General Komaroff was for a time governor of the town and port of Batoum, and upon the termination of the Akhalktekinsky expedition he was entrusted with the command of the Trans-Caspian army, and still retains it. But from the time of the annexation of Merv his talents have been devoted to the more peaceful task of making the Czar's new subjects in that quarter become better disposed towards Russia, a task for which he is said to be quite as well qualified as for fighting.

Sub-Lieutenant Alikhanoff, or more correctly, Maksut-Ali-Khan, the chief of the Merv oasis, was born at Leaghin, at Avari, in the Caucasus. He was educated at the gymnasium school in Tiflis, and passed through the military school of Constantine. He began his career as an officer in the Soumsky Regiment of Hussars, but very soon returned to the Caucasus, first as adjutant to the chief of Central Daghestan and afterwards to the military commander of the Daghestan district. Subsequently he was attached for special service to the Imperial Lieutenant of the Caucasus, the Grand Duke Michael, who, in 1873, placed him on the staff of Colonel Lomakin, chief of the Mangishlak detachment. With this detachment Alikhanoff went through the Khivan campaign, and on the 9th of May was wounded in the leg during a reconnaissance. For this he received the orders of Vladimir and Stanislas, and was made major. In 1875 he was again sent with General Lomakin to Krasnovodsk, and took part in the expedition for punishing the Turcomans. Up to this point Alikhanoff's career was a rapid one, for he was then only twenty-eight; but a duel with a comrade in the detachment cut it short for a time, and by sentence of a court-martial he was deprived of his orders and degraded to the ranks. The opportunity to retrieve his position offered itself by the outbreak of the Turkish war, and he went through that campaign as a subaltern in the ranks of the Pereyaslav Dragoons belonging to the Livian detachment. Here he gained the Cross of St. George, and on the repeated solicitations of Generals Terhukasoff and Lazareff he was again advanced to the rank of sub-lieutenant. In 1879 he took part in the first Tekke expedition, but did not go with the expedition of General Skobelev. It was afterwards with the artillery and Turcomann convoy which covered the Moscow merchant Kanshin's trade caravan to Merv, and in his successful persuasion of the Mervian elders to submit to Russia, that Lieutenant Alikhanoff gained his present celebrity and had the rank of major returned to him, and when this rank was recently abolished in the Russian army he was made a lieutenant-colonel. His orders, however, have not yet been returned to him. He has considerable literary and artistic taste, having produced some very fair sketches and descriptions of the various exciting scenes in which a great deal of his life has been passed in the Russian newspapers and illustrated Press. He is now thirty-nine years of age, and apparently of that fiery and turbulent disposition which has often led so many of Circassian countrymen into trouble in the Russian army. It will be remembered that about twelve months ago a Circassian prince of St. Petersburg killed a Russian merchant in a well-known suburban restaurant for a very trivial cause, by hacking him to pieces with his sword, or as the prince's comrades playfully put it, by "making a Pajarsky cutlet of him."

ARMIES OF NATIVE PRINCES.

WE have been within so short a distance of immediate war that it will not be amiss to take what breath is left us during the temporary—for it can be but a temporary—pause, and consider our resources as regards the sinews of war, sinews, we mean, not from a pecuniary point of view, but rather from that of a general who wishes to know on what number of sinewy right arms he may count. And to this end we must reckon up our own forces—those in our own pay, and those which would be lent us, which would, that is, in case of need, come to be paid by us.

Our own forces in India consist of a certain—we ought rather to say uncertain—number of European troops, which correspond to the "Queen's Regiments" of pre-mutiny days. The number, whether of regiments or of men, cannot be considered a "constant quantity." The exigencies of a service which has to garrison some post in pretty nearly every degree of latitude, from the North to the South Pole, forbid this, but the latter may roughly be taken at about 60,000 men.

We supplement this little host—scarce more than a French or Russian corps d'armée—by a trained native army of about 130,000, the proportion being one European to two natives, or one of the former, plus two of the latter, to about every five square miles, and to every 1,000 inhabitants of British India; perhaps the smallest army, proportionally, in any civilized country possessing so extensive a frontier. To these we should add nearly 150,000 police of various grades, about half-drilled, which a sanguine estimate might consider part of the available force, but who could assuredly not, with any safety, be withdrawn from towns and villages where, but for the support of the military, known to be always at hand, they would be ill able to cope with local rascality, and who, were the bulk of the soldiers withdrawn for frontier service, would almost certainly be quite unable to do so at all.

So much for what, on the most liberal interpretation, could be called our own forces.

The Indian papers have, however, reported for many weeks past most spontaneous and open-handed offers of the services of their soldiery from native princes and chiefs of every rank and grade of importance. Present political circumstances seem to suggest that we should do well to consider the numerical and potential value of these troops.

Numerically they amount, as is shown in a carefully written article in this month's Contemporary Review, by no less an authority than Sir Richard Temple, to 15,000 regular, and 53,000 irregular, cavalry; 90,000 regular, and 182,000 irregular, infantry; and 5,000 artillery, with about 1,000 guns "of all sorts," many of which are probably quite useless for any but saluting purposes. The total force thus enumerated amounts to 345,000, representing, that is, an average of one man to every one and a-half square miles of territory, and to every 145 of the population. Sir R. Temple aptly enough suggests that the results shown by the comparison above, instituted between the proportion of troops to population in our own territories, and those which it has become the practice to call feudatory states, "is at first sight wonderful." Even were our police (to which the bulk of the native forces bear a greater resemblance than to regulars) included on our side, thus bringing the British available strength to 277,000, the disproportion would still be remarkable.

And that the adhesion to the British cause of so large a body of troops from Native States might be a matter of vital importance to us is too obvious to need demonstration. Though only a small proportion of them be really efficient, all are trained, more or less, to the use of arms, and "out of so large a whole a small part would represent a considerable force, which might be wielded as a potent auxiliary by an organising power like the British; and," adds the writer, "it would be very possible to improve the quality of a great part of these forces."

The real value, however, of a contingent drawn from such a source, whether numerically large or small, depends on its loyalty and trustworthiness. There is no reason to suppose that the individuals forming it would at heart be either more or less loyal and trustworthy than the population whence they would be drawn (though it is by no means improbable that they might at first resent the comparatively strict discipline of a British camp and the rigid prohibition of looting). On this head we cannot do better than quote the very sensible remarks of the essay above referred to. Premising that native loyalty largely depends on good administration, Sir R. Temple adduces the following weighty considerations, which, coming from so high an authority, cannot be too earnestly commended to the attention of our readers:—

"Native loyalty also, in part, depends on the opinion which the people have regarding British pride, power, and resolution (the italics are our own), also regarding British resources. If that opinion be high, as it has hitherto been—if England proves herself equal to emergencies, as she has hitherto proved, then the forces of the Native States will be as well disposed as the rest of their countrymen. If England were to fall back, or vacillate, or deteriorate generally, then all India would begin to shake, and of course these Native forces would feel the concussion, and would succumb to temptation. There are particular causes which tend to keep these forces loyal, and might induce them, for a while at least, to withstand temptation. For their immediate masters the native sovereigns are bound in many ways to the British Government. . . . If the British power were to collapse, most of the Native States would be smothered in the ruins, and that they know full well. If a revolution in India were to succeed, there would be a cataclysm in which the

Many of these troops have, we know, volunteered their services to us; some did so, only the other day, without a hint being given them, to serve in Egypt—a fact which may fairly be taken as a gratifying proof of the general popularity of our rule.

This is, perhaps, hardly the place to discuss the use which might be made of these troops, supposing them trustworthy. The best would probably be employed (but under English officers, and along with British troops—this we regard as indispensable) in the field. The remainder would be most useful in garrison duty, and in that most necessary work, where the lines of communication are so exceptionally long as in India, efficiently keeping them open. They would, indeed, have very much the same part to play which would in England fall to the lot of the Volunteers. Sindia's admirably drilled forces, those born soldiers, the Goorkhas, some picked troops from the Nizam's army, would form no contemptible auxiliaries to a British field force; and it is most satisfactory to reflect that their masters are, without exception, loyal to Her Majesty, and vying with each other in showing their attachment to the British Raj.

PROFESSOR VAMBERY ON THE ANGLO-RUSSIAN CRISIS.

The presence at Willis's Rooms on Tuesday of so many noblemen and gentlemen, who were, as Bismarck would say, "sachkundig," i.e., know what, as to the matter in hand, they are talking about, as Lord Napier of Magdala, Lord Strathnairn, and Sir F. Haines (all formerly commanders-in-chief in India), Sir Richard Pollock and Colonel Malleon, than whom none can have riper or more recent knowledge of the countries respecting which the lecturer was to speak, would alone have formed an audience at once the most intelligent and the most appreciative.

In the presence of such a gathering the duty of the chairman, Mr. E. Stanhope, was easy and pleasant enough. He had but to remind the meeting that the Constitutional Union, which had invited their attendance, did not approach the Central Asian question for the first time. He remembered, he said, that he had the honour of taking the chair at the first meeting of the Constitutional Union when they discussed the policy adopted in the face of all our best military advisers, and against the opinion of the bulk of educated political advisers, of abandoning Candahar and of giving up the railway which would have connected that place with India. Unfortunately, the wise words of Colonel Malleon on that occasion—(cheers)—were utterly disregarded.

Professor Vambery came, he said, not as a partisan, but as an admirer of England, and as a former traveller in, and a writer on, Central Asia. From the time, 20 years ago, when he first published his book on Central Asia, he had prided himself upon having gained the attention of the British public through his writings, and, he said he prided himself upon this, because it was the greatest honour one could obtain, to be listened to by a nation like this. Having done his duty with his pen he now thought it his duty to speak when he saw this noble country in danger. It might seem bold in him to come forward to speak in a country which had among its councillors a Rawlinson, a Yule, Malleon, and Boulger, but he came forward now because he had seen their predictions verified. If they inquired how Russia had achieved her conquests in Central Asia, beginning from the time when she sent her outposts from Orenburg to the Khirgiz deserts, they would find that it had not been by courage and manliness but by treacherous behaviour that Russia had overrun the Khanates. It might be said by some that it was not to be regretted that the Khirgiz should have been brought under control by Russia. He should not deplore their loss of independence if their position had been bettered; but from even the most favourable point of view it was impossible to make out any extraordinary advantage to the people from the Russian occupation of the country, except, perhaps, that there was an end of the wars which in his time they were continually waging against each other. There was now quiet, but it was the quiet of death. Referring to Prince Gortchakoff's diplomatic note when Tashkend was taken in 1864, he remarked upon the repetition in the case of Penjeh of the arguments then used. It would be a misfortune if our statesmen were deluded now as they were 20 years ago—(cheers). It was, indeed, surprising that men could be found here to indulge in a diplomatic discussion of this question and to argue that Russia was constrained by circumstances to move towards Herat. If we gave in at Penjeh it would be Herat next, and then Candahar and the Bolan Pass—(hear, hear). He maintained that it would be most detrimental to this country to allow Russia to go up to the frontier of India—(cheers). With Russia at the Bolan or the Khyber Pass what would be the consequences if we waged war and lost a battle? He did not know how it might be in the future, but England could not now afford to have a European neighbour—(hear, hear). Condemning the indulgence which had allowed Russia to advance as far as she had done across Central Asia, he derided the simplicity of statesmen who accepted the assurance of wily, astute, and cunning Asiatics as they might those of a people really possessing the qualities of European culture. In the present emergency forbearance shown towards Russia was the greatest sin. He believed that war was unavoidable between England and Russia, and the sooner it came the better for this country—(cheers). Giving his reasons for believing that the Afghans, particularly the people of Herat, and even the Candaharis, in view of the advance of Russia, were not disposed to be unfriendly to the English, he said that if the Ameer were to put himself at the head of the Afghans and say he would withstand Russia, he would have the whole nation at his back—(cheers). In conclusion Professor Vambery repeated the reasons which have led him to look to this country to maintain and spread Western civilisation in the East.

After a few words from Lord G. Hamilton and Mr. Marriott, deploring Mr. Gladstone's abandonment of the allegations on which he obtained the vote of £11,000,000, Sir James Fergusson, until within the last few weeks the Governor of Bombay, observed that at this moment all India was looking with anxious attention to see the part Her Majesty's Government would play in the face of such a danger as had not menaced it for a generation. Any weakness or any failure of duty on the part of the Government would bring upon the country a disaster greater and more difficult to repair than the mutiny—(hear, hear). He urged that it was not a question whether Russia or England should be mistress in Afghanistan. The Afghans ought to be assured that their independence was secure, and that they might rely upon our support.

Lord Cranbrook, in moving a vote of thanks to Professor Vambery, said it must be a source of great satisfaction to us, who as a nation have been taunted with following the gospel of selfishness and looking only to British interests, to find a disinterested spectator wishing to see the civilising influence of England prevail over that which had been described as the avocation of Russia. Recalling the warnings given by Sir Bartle Frere, he said let anyone read what that distinguished man wrote in 1874, see how all he predicted had been verified, and all the precautions he advised had been neglected, and say whether the time had not come for England to put down her foot and say, "Thus far and no further shall you go"—(cheers). He would not speak in favour of war, but his impression was that the preparation for war was continual concession and continual yielding, and that the way to avoid war was to make it understood that a powerful nation meant to maintain her own position, and that she has an arm strong enough to do so when the occasion arose.

PRIVATE LAWRIE AND HIS LOVE.*

"You can jaw till you're speechless about your Lancashire lasses, but, to my thinking, there's not one of them can hold a candle to that girl of the Colonel's." Such was the barrack-room exclamation of a private in the regiment commanded by the father to the maiden whose praises were thus sung; but it elicited a remonstrance from Private John Lawrie, who requested that the young lady might not be made the subject of conversation on the part of his comrades in arms. But whence this interest on the part of a common soldier in the welfare of his commanding officer's daughter? The answer demands a retrospect.

"Papa, so glad to see 'oo!" was the artless and unsophisticated greeting of a tiny sick child, the only son of his father, Sir Chauntrey Lindon, who watched with the deepest anxiety the flickering flame of life in the delicate infant which lay stretched upon a bed of sickness; the one, the sole solace of the broken-hearted parent's life was to dote on the tender babe which never knew a mother's care. Fate destined that the child was to recover, but his attenuated frame and impaired health precluded the possibility, as he grew up, of his going to school, and, as a sole resource, he was placed under a tutor at the ancestral home. In these circumstances the thoughtful father bethought himself how best to provide a companion for his child. His choice alighted upon a brother's son, a stripling a few summers older than his cousin; of stout frame, bold heart, and sound principles, the newcomer was in every way a fitting associate for the younger student. The two grew up together, went to college together, and, in the truest and noblest sense of the word, became bosom friends. It chanced that at the time they were about to leave the University, the elder of the two, while in London, fell in with an ex-captain, who, with plausible assurances and affable manners, easily led the unsophisticated youth, ignorant as he was of the ways of roguery and deceit, to embark in a horse-racing speculation. The result was a loss—not, it is true, very considerable in itself, but utterly beyond the young man's slender means. Unable to "pay his way" from his own resources, he betook himself to his uncle. Sir Chauntrey readily consented to provide the money, but the severity of the baronet's manner, and his manifest displeasure at the reckless behaviour of his nephew, steeled the latter's heart, and he refused to accept the money save as an advance to be refunded by him. To carry out this high-minded resolution needed the exercise of the utmost economy, and involved an endeavour to earn a livelihood so as to enable him to repay the loan with the utmost rapidity. But fate was hard, the collegian had no special attainments, and all his efforts to turn "an honest penny" by means of literature failed. Still, he did the utmost in his power to live frugally, and scrape together every farthing he could spare, for the debt weighed heavily on his soul. It chanced at this period of his career that the niece of his landlady, herself a member of a family which had seen better days, was remaining at school beyond the allotted period, awaiting the arrival of her parents from India. At times she would run over to pay a visit to her aunt, and in due course an intimacy sprang up between the young lodger and the still younger school girl. Matters, indeed, went on in a haphazard sort of way, till at length the pair became unconsciously, as it were, engaged. The course of true love did not, however, run smooth, for the girl's father shortly came to England with his regiment, and the young maiden was "under orders" to rejoin her own home. This entailed, of course, a separation between the lovers—a separation, too, which there seemed no prospect of avoiding. So, in a fit of generous emotion, the faithful aspirant to the hand of the Colonel's daughter resolved to enlist in the regiment which her father commanded. Such was Private John Lawrie, such his love.

It may well be imagined that the position thus assumed was awkward and embarrassing for both parties, necessitating the exercise of prudence and caution, qualities which are not generally called into play during the ecstatic period which precedes marriage; but the situation became the more surrounded with difficulties and perplexities when the adjutant, a snob with money but no birth, conceived a liking for the colonel's daughter, now developed into a maiden of surpassing beauty, and finding his advances unrequited, demeaned himself by venting his spite upon the unhappy Private Lawrie, whom certain circumstances had led him to surmise was a rival in the field of love. How the mean-minded martinet met his reward, how the high-souled "daughter of the regiment" was true amidst all adversities to her "Jack," how the poor, broken-hearted baronet's only son lingered and pined till the grave closed over the remains of one who in the midst of life was in death, how the old colonel fell in with the wishes of his daughter when he learnt that Private John Lawrie was now heir to a fine estate, how marriage ended long, weary months of anxiety, perplexity and distress—this, and much more, will arouse interest and rivet attention.

Mr. Jevons's book, if not brilliant, is interesting; its fault, if fault it be, is that the opportunity has been lost of throwing light upon the barrack life of our soldiers, with all its trials, its temptations, and, it might fain be hoped, its charms and pleasures.

RECORD OF SERVICES.*

Inspired by a well-deserved admiration for the small band of Englishmen who built up the fabric of monarchy in the East, Mr. Charles C. Prinsep, the Statistical Reporter and late Superintendent of Records at the India Office, has presented to the world a record of services of such of the civilians in the East India Company's employ as were attached to the Madras Presidency. A work of this nature needs no apology, unless it be on the part of the public, who, ready as they are to consult works of reference, seldom give to the compiler that meed of praise which is due to laborious research and careful perusal of masses of documents and papers. The value of Mr. Prinsep's work must of course depend upon its accuracy, in regard to which the official position which he holds under the Crown, with access to official records, may be taken as a guarantee that what is told is told in verity and truth. Criticism in such instances as these is scarcely possible—there is but little upon which to comment. "Time" alone can be the reviewer of a work which if when it be taken from the shelf is not found wanting will have served the purpose for which it was written. It, however, fault must be found, it might be pointed out that the date of birth would have been a material addition to the stock of information. This could doubtless almost invariably be traced. The time of decease, equally useful as it would be, cannot, presumably, on all occasions be found recorded; this difficulty, it may be supposed, is the reason why there are so many omissions under this latter head. Would it not, too, have been as well to have stated at page 161 that the addendum is a list of deaths. The raison d'être is only apparent from the table of contents.

The acknowledgment paid by the compiler to Colonel Laurie's assistance and aid is gratifying and pretty. Such tributes redound to the credit alike of the giver and the receiver.

* "Record of Services of the Hon. East India Company's Civil Servants in the Madras Presidency from 1741 to 1858." By Charles C. Prinsep, Statistical Reporter and late Superintendent of Records, India Office, London. Trubner and Co. 1885.

Chit Chat.

ELEPHANT-HUNTING is doubtless exciting, but it is sometimes embarrassing. What can be done with a huge beast which, when captured and "noosed," deliberately places its trunk round a tree and defies the efforts of all the party to make him "move on?" Police Constable X would find such a charge somewhat hopeless.

Acts of bravery and devotion are never wanting wherever the Anglo-Saxon race plant themselves on the earth's surface, but to follow with only a hatchet a tiger who has carried off a native surveyor engaged in his duties in the Assam forests is more than ordinarily "plucky;" and Mr. Loader, the hero of this adventure, merits a word of more than usual commendation. The picture is completed by the endeavour of the courageous Englishman to bind up the wounds with his own shirt, torn into rags for the purpose.

How to deal with lunatics has at length been solved. Some time since an unhappy lad presented himself at the Berar Asylum with a letter to the superintendent from the Deputy Commissioner of his district, explaining that the youth had been picked up by the police wandering about as a harmless though naked lunatic, and suggesting that he should be cured, and then trained for service in the Public Works Department. As the Pioneer pithily remarks, "Even if brains are not necessary in the P.W.D., clothes ought to be regarded as more or less desirable."

THE Ameer of Afghanistan is evidently a courtier. "Henceforth the sky of India and Afghanistan must wear the same aspect," was the brilliant rejoinder of the ruler of "rocks and stones" to an officer who remarked that at Rawul Pindi the weather had proved like that which was experienced amidst the clouded regions of the kingdom of Cabul. It may be surmised that at the Conference Abdur Rahman was not far behind the Viceroy in the art of conversing.

By a singular mistake some blasting operations in a tunnel on the Hurnai line were commenced in the busy season instead of at a time when the railway is almost unused; the result was a block for a fortnight. Fancy if this were England instead of India! What a chorus of discontent would arise from an infuriated travelling public.

MR. WADDY, barrister-at-law, can evidently enjoy a joke. When defending some Afghans for assaulting the police in the execution of their duty, he pleaded that the race were so clannish that they wanted to help remove their compatriot to prison. Brave Waddy! But the magistrate did not take the same view of the case.

BAZAAR opinion on the (as it was thought) coming struggle with Russia is contained in the dictum of a Muslim trader that "they have been quiet for twenty-eight years since the Crimean War. They will be quiet for a hundred after this business is over." But the business is not to begin, so says the world of diplomacy.

THE Madras Mail says that while "war is imminent between England and Russia, and the whole civilised world will tremble with the shock of the impact," Mr. Grant Duff, the Governor, is "dallying in the hills with a heliotrope and flirting with a fuschia." Rather bitter this. Moral.—If you would be a governor do not be a botanist.

AMONGST the many social problems of the day is the liquor traffic. That an enormously increased revenue is derived from spirits in the present day in India, as compared with the returns of a few years since, is beyond the pale of argument, and the question naturally occurs to what is this circumstance due? Some philanthropists tell us that the welfare of the body politic is being steadily but surely undermined by intoxicants, the use of which was completely unknown during the earlier decades of the present century; others, casting aside these notes of warning as "old women's fears," bid us be of good cheer, because the increase of population, coupled with the augmentation of the national wealth, and therefore national expenditure on luxuries, is amply sufficient to account for the large expanse in the revenue from spirits, especially if it be taken into consideration that the duty has been steadily raised by Government as the demand increased. It is conclusive that more tax is paid by the nation, but is more liquor consumed per head by our swarthy brethren? There is "the rub."

THE Madras Press does not seem to appreciate the Indian Council at Downing-street. "They are not doing much harm at present, because they are not doing much at all." But is the satire applicable only to the unfortunate advisers of the Secretary of State for India?

Imperial Parliament.

MONDAY, MAY 11.

In the House of Commons, in reply to an inquiry by Sir S. Northcote as to the actual state of the negotiations on the Afghan frontier, Mr. Gladstone stated, while promising papers this week, that the matter had practically been settled at a conference between Lords Granville and Hartington on the English, and MM. de Staal and Lessar on the Russian side. A hearty laugh, we fear, at the inequality of the two sides in a match in which so much is at stake, greeted the announcement of the names. (A similar intimation was made by Earl Granville in the Lords.) "I am able," said the Premier, "with Lord Granville's authority, to say as much as this: The reference to the judgment of the sovereign of a friendly State having been agreed to, as already stated in the House, and no apprehension being felt as to the settlement of the details of this point, several meetings have been held on the subject of fixing the principal points of the frontier. These meetings have been attended by Lord Granville and Lord Kimberley on the part of the British Government, and by M. de Staal and M. Lessar on the part of the Russian Government. (A laugh.) The effect of these proceedings has been that they have arrived at an agreement which is satisfactory to Her Majesty's British Government, and, let me add, which is satisfactory also to Lord Dufferin and the Council of India—(Ministerial cheers). There has been no time to receive the final ratification of these proceedings on the part of the Russian Government, but that is expected certainly from day to day. The time, the House will observe, has not been very long since the communications were commenced, and I may add with regard to the forms of proceedings that there is no difficulty. We anticipate the formation of a Convention with Russia at the close of the proceedings, but it may be an open question whether a convenient time for forming that Convention will not be when we have concluded, not only the main proceedings between the two Governments, but likewise the proceedings in detail for the delimitation of the frontier. I am not in a position to state at the present moment that the name of the arbitrator has been fixed. I do not speak of that as intending to convey that it is a subject of controversy, but simply because it comes in order after the proceedings with regard to the frontier, and with reference to the proceedings of the arbitration itself. We have no reason to believe that there will be any long delay.

IN Hill Tipperah the ceremony of marriage in high life is celebrated in an enclosure with a canopy of twenty-one shawls arranged one above the other. The bridegroom is carried to the spot on an elevated platform, accompanied by a numerous procession, while the bride follows in the rear, surrounded by her female attendants, whose duty is to screen the maiden with their umbrellas from the view of the common herd. The coy damsel is then carried seven times around her future husband, the pair in the while pelting each other with rice. They then exchange garlands, and the religious portion of the ceremony commences.

ONE or two rather good stories are told in a Bombay paper anent snakes. A spinster, so we are taught to believe, sat the greater part of dinner with a snake coiled round her ankle, being altogether too modest to raise an alarm. That maiden must have been of uncertain years, and have worn spectacles. But here is a better anecdote. It chanced that once upon a time some charades were being performed, when a servant rushed in violently and evidently in great commotion, proclaiming, "Samp hai!" (here is a snake). The audience were mightily alarmed—the women went into hysterics, the men rushed out to seize sticks and every other available weapon of defence. But, alas! it transpired that the alarm was part of the performance. That charade must have been intended for the 1st of April.

SEARLE, Lieutenant A. E., of the 1st Battalion York Regiment, officiating wing officer 12th Native Infantry, April 5, 1882.

The undermentioned officer is admitted to the Bombay Staff Corps with effect from the date specified, subject to the confirmation of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India :—

DAVIES, Lieut. J., of the 1st Battalion York Regiment, officiating squadron officer 1st Bombay Lancers, April 26, 1882.

ATKINSON, Capt. A. H. (Bombay Volunteer Rifle Corps), 1st Worcester Regiment, resigns his appointment as adjutant of the corps.

ATKINSON—The services of Capt. A. H. Atkinson are replaced at the disposal of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

A STRONG warning against inconsiderate meddling with the Native Army is afforded by the result of General Wilson's attempt to "strengthen" it by converting three regiments into two. The scheme, opposed by many who well knew the native soldier, excited disgust among the men themselves. The 34th Bengal Infantry lost 318 out of 690, the 35th the enormous proportion of 536 out of 700, the 3rd Punjab Native Infantry 553 out of 757, all men whose esprit de corps caused them to elect for pension or discharge rather than serve in another regiment, and, presumably, among the best in their own.

THE

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MAY 19, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

THE "latest intelligence" does not, as regards the "burning question" of Afghanistan, at all increase our knowledge. The Ameer, like the Czar, has complimented his troops on their bravery.

THE railway to Askabad is to be completed by the 1st March next.

NOTHING practical has been done in the Afghan frontier arbitration question. Mr. Gladstone's utterances are as ambiguous and oracular as usual. In a discussion on the Blue-book recently presented, he gave utterance to the statement, unprecedented, we believe, for a Prime Minister dealing with important negotiations, that it was impossible for him to enter into the details of the Blue-book, nor could he pretend to give the House a satisfactory opinion on it, "unless I have had an opportunity of examining it." Is it improper to ask the raison d'être of Prime Ministers, if they are ignorant, at least of the general purport, of negotiations carried on by Governments over which they profess to preside, and can answer simple questions concerning them?

MR. ONSLOW certainly "scored one" in inquiring in what way the services of Sir P. Lumsden were to be recognized by his Government, considering how those of Komaroff had been rewarded by the Czar; a query to which, it need hardly be added, no reply was vouchsafed. To reward Sir Peter would cast a slur on the veracity of a Russian General! It might even, conceivably, offend the Czar! What say the foreign papers?

BLOOD is thicker than water, as the gallant American Admiral observed when he received on board his hospitable vessel our men, wounded at the assault on the Taku forts; and it has always struck us as singular that we do not, as a rule, care what our American brethren think of us and our doings. They show real sensitiveness regarding every well-considered expression of English opinion, as much so, perhaps, as it has become the fashion in this country to feel, or to profess to feel, for the vaguest utterances of Bismarck's well-known semi-official. The better, and, often enough, the worse, of the European journals are habitually quoted in almost all our "dailies," and in many of our "weeklies;" American papers, except on matters affecting the "States" or the "Dominion," rarely. We consider this a mistake; and think that, at any rate, where Indian matters are concerned, we shall, as a rule, find truer and more enlightened sympathy in America than in that Europe in which the present Government have left us, without a friend or an ally. The American papers are, as usual, outspoken enough.

"EVERY Emperor of Russia," says one, "seems to hold his office by a strange tenure—an obligation to make war at some period or other of his life. . . . As to the question whether the present Czar is embarking on his military career under conditions different to those of his predecessors, it may be answered that, while the general conditions are the same, the present Czar has to encounter an impulsive force and an obstacle hitherto unknown to previous Russian Emperors. The impulsive force is revolution, and the obstacle the German Empire. When the present Czar ascended the throne, he had two paths open before him—that of liberalism, and that of repression. It was not surprising that he should have chosen the latter path, because his father's fearful death was, in the opinion of the Russian governing class, to be attributed to his liberal tendencies more than to anything else. Repression, therefore, has been the rule of the present Czar's Government. But it has been found that, while repression under former Czars gave the governing class breathing time and stifled revolution, repression under the present Czar has augmented the forces of that revolution rather than otherwise. In short, it has come to this, that war is the only way out of a deadlock, and the question among the Czar's counsellors is now, and has been since the meeting at Skierniewice, in what direction that war shall be waged. Here comes the obstacle: Germany and Austria bar the way in Europe, and therefore Russia must fight in Asia. The prestige acquired by the conquest of India, it is thought, would stifle revolution in Russia for a century at least, and it now only remains to consider what are Russia's chances of success. If she can hurl the whole military force of her Empire on British India, British pluck and endurance will certainly be tried to the utmost, and it is impossible to predict what the result will be. It is, therefore, a matter of life or death for Great Britain that the impending war should not be localized in Asia, but shall be extended to Europe. Russia's vulnerable point is the Black Sea, and if England has the resolution to seize it, despite of paper protests, she may come out of the struggle intact, while Russia will be obliged to renounce her schemes of conquest for many generations, and the Romanoff dynasty may consider itself very fortunate if it be allowed to transform autocracy into constitutional monarchy in Russia."

The conclusion which is drawn is admirably practical:—

The only common-sense solution of the present difficulty, which is worth tons of sentimental nonsense, is the occupation of Candahar and Herat by British troops, with or without the consent of the Ameer of Afghanistan, and the connecting of the two cities, in each of which there should be permanent British garrisons, with Quetta, by means of lines of railway. If Russian generals opposed such a plan, they should be driven back to Merv, or as much further back as they liked to go. Such a course would settle the destiny of India for a century at least, and would remove the Central Asian question from the region of practical politics.

The subjoined must have amused, if it did not puzzle, that most prosaic of departments, H.M.'s Post Office. A letter was received some years ago at Hong Kong from Foochow, which was to be forwarded, and bore this poetical address, verbatim et literatim:—

Postman, please, in kind permission,
This letter on the China Mission
To dear Mrs. Thompson hand—
At the West Field, North Sundaland!
Belford—by the Waron Sand
"England,"—Northumbaland.

IN our last issue we remarked at some length on the armies entertained by the Native States of India; and, while expressing gratification at the loyalty of their sovereigns in placing them so wholly at our disposal, ventured to hint that all these troops would be more or less useful; the best in line of battle, the residue for garrisons, and for the all-important duty of maintaining communications. We had no reason to think we were in error. But we cannot set up our judgment against that of the Ameer of Afghanistan. Says a contemporary:—

The Ameer had some difficulty in understanding the complacency of the English in allowing the native princes to have armies of their own. He was told that they were occasionally useful to us, and had, in fact, taken part in the last Afghan war. "Ah! and were killed off that way," was the Ameer's reply. "No, they kept our lines of communication open in the Kurram Valley." "Did they? I should have sent them where they might be thinned a little." His Highness evidently does not approve of having armies within armies.

WE rejoice to see that Lord George Hamilton, in the debate of the 11th, drew attention to one consequence of the present policy, or want of policy, as to Russian aggression. "Owing," he said, "to the advance of Russia in Central Asia, the whole control of the foreign relations of India must be transferred from the Indian Foreign Office to the English Foreign Office, and must form part of the policy of the Government of the day." Anyone who knows what has been the issue of a similar transfer of the control of our Persian relations from India to the Foreign Office, how such an exceptionally qualified man as Sir H. Rawlinson (appointed with a view to Indian, and, therefore, to Imperial interests, and who had deservedly acquired such ascendancy at Teheran that the Russian Envoy quaked before him) was forced to resign on the transfer of the Persian Embassy to the Foreign Office, and was replaced, to the ruin of British influence, by an individual personally odious to the Shah, will foresee the result of a similar move on a larger scale; and we are sure that the note of warning has not been sounded a moment too soon.

In last week's number we gave a brief biography of Komaroff and Alikhanoff. Sir Peter Lumsden's services need no recapitulation; and as is well known, he was not present at "the Penjdeh massacre," but avowedly reported it, so to speak, at second-hand. Not so Captain Yate, who was actually present, and whose veracity is directly impugned by the Russian accounts. We read of him:—

At a time when so much depends on the word and character of Captain C. E. Yate, of the Bengal Staff Corps, it may interest the public to know that he is thirty-five years old, son of a Yorkshire clergyman, with a large mixture of Campbell blood. His fair skin and bright red hair will save him in any Central Asian Society for being taken for anything but a true Briton. Charlie Yate's Greek and Latin were acquired at Shrewsbury School, and he has always been considered a most trust worthy and industrious officer.

The question asked the other day, in the Commons, by Sir H. Wolff, himself a diplomatist, as to the abolition of the Consulate at Tiflis, established by Lord Beaconsfield in 1876, and abolished by the present Government soon after their accession to power, was incomplete. He asked for dates; he should have asked for the reason of the abolition of the post. We hope he will do so. It would have been invaluable at the present to have had at the headquarters of the Russian Caucasus province "a chiel takin' notes." Perhaps the Russians objected to this, and this caused the Consul's withdrawal. The inquiry should be made, together with another: Have we any Consuls in Asiatic Russia; if so, who are they, and where stationed?

THE Russians, we see, are going to establish "a separate diplomatic agency" in Calcutta; a focus, that is, of intrigue with the Native States. Of course we ought to retaliate by refusing recognition to the Envoy, or by insisting, as a condition precedent, on the establishment of Consulates throughout Russian Asia. Yet we allow the Russians to proclaim to the world that special permits are required to see the works on the Central Asian Railway, and that "no Englishman will on any account be allowed to view them." Can it be an English Government which allows itself to be thus flouted? No, it is a Government of Nidderings.

"It is generally recognised," says the well-informed Statist, "that the reduced drawings (of the India Council) of late will necessitate the issue shortly of a Sterling Loan." This, in the present state of the money-market, is pretty sure to attract attention, and we think most of our readers, unlike the worthy Berliners, will prefer it as an investment to Russian bonds.

THE annexed thoughtful and sensible remarks in the Spectator demand more than a casual perusal from every Anglo-Indian:—

The great significance of the debate of Monday and Tuesday in the Lords, upon the defences of India, may possibly escape the attention of some of our readers. The subject, though a burning, is not a lively one. The debate was, however, of the highest importance, and when it reaches India will be studied line by line by all governing men. It was the first debate in which the new position of England in Asia, arising from the Russian advance to Afghanistan, was seriously discussed as a permanent and not as a momentary fact; and every peer who took part in it was, to a greater or less extent, a representative man. It is clear that the new situation has been carefully studied, and that England meets it with a policy which, allowing for certain differences of detail, is accepted by both parties, and which, whether successful or unsuccessful, is adequately great.

The cardinal fact, to begin with, is admitted on all hands. Russia having, in the course of her destiny, rolled up the Paropamisus, or chain of low hills protecting Afghanistan from the North-West, England has "lost her insularity." No one of the experienced statesmen who spoke attempted to question or to minimise that great fact, Lord Kimberley, in particular, using words which, considering alike his official position and his experience, approach to a manifesto. The new position is not unendurable, for it is one which is endured by Germany, by Austria, and even by Sweden; but it is one which calls for certain efforts and certain sacrifices. The frontier must be guarded against Russia, if only to prevent the perpetual recurrence of panic; and the guarding, as in the case of Germany and of Austria, involves a considerable and a continuous military effort which cannot be avoided by any treaty, and probably not by any war. The two peoples touch, and the frontier of India must be made so strong that even a threat of invasion would produce no fear, while actual invasion would find the resisting force completely prepared.

We are really shocked to see Punch so rude to those in authority. We suggest for the subjoined paragraph a different heading. It should not be "Wanted—A Reason," but "Wanted—Reason;" which assuredly, in some people in high places, does not superabound.

WANTED—A REASON?—It is said that 8,000 British troops are, at this present moment, being slowly scorched to death under the broiling sun of the African desert. Why is this? Is it because—Either the Government has something else to think about; or Lord Hartington is waiting for the facts; or Lord Wolseley knows thoroughly well what he wants to do with the surviving remnant next autumn; or the Duke of Cambridge is of opinion that, as the troops are paid to die for their country, there is nothing after all much to grumble at; or that some responsible people in authority are letting things slide towards a harrowing catastrophe, which, when it happens, will surely arouse such a storm of indignation through the length and breadth of the country as it has not known for many a day—though it will arouse it, like all other popular storms, as usual—too late!

MANY readers will regret to hear, on the authority of the Englishman's correspondent at Goa, that mangoes will be exceedingly dear this season, for very few trees have flowered, and in those which have the blossoms have not all set, having been destroyed by dew.

"It is a sin to think one way and speak another." Such is one of the precepts amongst Burmese monks. The injunction may be commended to the Senate of England.

WE are right glad to see the sturdy and thoroughly English Bishop of Liverpool speaking out; he is a man who rarely throws away his words, written or spoken. He did not, he told the Church Missionary Society at their last May Meeting, grudge the additional Income-tax to make the navy of old England what it ought to have been if it had been properly attended to. What he deplored was the false economy, the wretched parsimony, the miserable management which had reduced the navy to this condition, and necessitated the spending of the money, owing to the ridiculous parsimony and false economy of those who had the reins of government in their hands.

WE must hope the enclosed will attract the attention of the War-Office. We should not care "to stand up to the bowling" of a Nordenfolt. Says the Army and Navy Gazette:—

According to a telegram from Vienna, the experiments made at Vörösvár with the new five-barrel Nordenfolt mitrailleuse have given the following results:—At 1,000 yards range twenty-six per cent. of the shots took effect on a target two mètres high. At 600 yards seventy per cent. of the shots struck. In the time firing, 100 shots in twelve seconds, and 480 in one minute were registered.

A CORRESPONDENT requests us to state that Mr. S. Sattluanadhan, late of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, but now Head Master of the Government College Rajamundri, in the Godavari District, took his degree of M.A. at Cambridge, on the 8th inst. He is also LL.B. of this University.

THIS week's Statist contains, in tabular form, what we do not remember having before seen, a statement for the last five years of the working of the principal Co-operative Stores in London. These institutions maintain the hold on public favour, which, when once fairly established, they speedily secured. The total sales during the last year of the five "Service" Stores reached the enormous total of £5,279,165, to which the principal contributors were the Army and Navy, with £2,508,532, and the Civil Service Supply, with £1,691,456.

It used to be said, first a missionary, then (the capabilities of the country having been gauged) traders, lastly, an army and annexation. Let us look to Tibet and to Kashgar. We have not, indeed, a missionary (the Greek Church is not supposed to be great in the missionary line), but a Russian "explorer." Witness the following extract from the Times of the 15th:—

As great interest is felt in the progress of Colonel Prjevalsky's explorations in Northern Tibet and his attempt to reach Lhasa, the following message from him, dated Lob Nor, March 15 (probably O. S.), and published in the Invalide Russe, will be read with interest:

"During the last autumn and winter we visited Eastern Zaidam as far as Lob Nor. The middle range of the Kuen Lun, hitherto unknown, has been examined with sufficient care. The ancient route leading from Khoten to China has been found and thoroughly explored. We have also discovered three enormous snow peaks, to which we have given the names of Muscovite, Columbus, and Enigmatical. The most elevated point of the first-named is Mount Kremlin, of the second Mount Djinri, and of the third the Crown of Monomachus, which are all of a higher elevation than 20,000 feet above the sea. The Tibetan plateau skirting the middle Kuen Lun has an average height of 4,000 feet. No inhabitants were met with except in the Southern Zaidam. Further to the west the flora and fauna of the desert are extremely poor. In the month of December the cold was so intense that the mercury froze. We passed the month of February and the first fortnight of March at Lob Nor. We are just about to set out again, with the intention of crossing Cherchen, for the purpose of reaching Kiria, in the district of Khoten. During the three months of summer we shall traverse Northern Tibet, if the Chinese do not oppose us, and in the autumn we shall return to our own Turkestan. We are all in good health."

Mark another item of news, probably not so wholly unconnected with the above as might at first sight appear. It will be seen above that Khoten, visited several years ago by "Khoten" Johnson, and a "dependency," at one time, of Kashgar, has not escaped the ubiquitous Russian:—

Nusret, a Persian paper, learns from Bokhara that the Mohammedan insurgents in Kashgar, whose leader is Yakoob Beg's son, have sent a deputation to the Russian Consul in Kashgar, begging his Government to furnish them with arms, money, and ammunition. In return they will place Kashgar under Russian sovereignty as soon as it is freed from the Chinese yoke. Russia hesitates to comply with this request, as by so doing she would proclaim open hostility to China. The Chinese garrisons in the province of Kashgar have retired in all haste to Kashgar, Yarkand, and other towns. They expect that forces will be sent to relief from China.

It is satisfactory to find that the Chinese are more wide-awake to the probabilities of the future than we have proved ourselves. They are looking out for allies; our Government have long since disgusted all those who once wished us well:—

China is ready to welcome an English alliance against Russia if Afghanistan, Kashgar, or Cora is threatened.

Should war be declared China would promptly hurl her northern troops, well organised, drilled, and ready, into the field against the Amoor provinces, which are weakly defended. The English fleet should scour the seas, protect the coast, and transport the Chinese troops from Southern China, where they are now released, to Lazareff or elsewhere. The Chinese troops and fortifications are strong on the Manchurian frontier.

Japan favours the arrangement strongly.

The northern troops are the best in China. They are never sent south, but are kept ready for any emergency in the north.

The Chinese fleet possesses a nucleus of most valuable vessels, heavily armed; also torpedo boats. The Chinese army should be directed by British officers, and the Chinese fleet officered by Europeans commanded by British.

Yet a very different aspect of affairs is presented by a later telegram from Shanghai, dated May 16:—"The Chinese expected the English surrender in the matter of the Afghan frontier. They ridicule the war preparations as a sham, likely to deceive only the British public." Even the Chinese have already found out the "humbug"—if our readers will excuse the word—and chicane of the present Cabinet. What a pity that the English nation should, of all, be the last to perceive it! How low we must have sunk in the estimation of all Asia! And all for what?

The Calcutta correspondent of the Standard says:—At Deogurh, which is one of the seven holiest shrines in India, a great procession of Pundits and priests is being organised. Prayers are to be offered for the preservation of peace between England and Russia, and for a blessing on the Queen. Such a ceremony is almost, if not quite, unprecedented in the history of English rule in Asia.

Those of Vienna are usually well informed, and make good use of their information. What says the well-known Tagblatt as regards the ostentatiously-bestowed honours given to Komaroff?—

Such infatuation argues no statesman-like seeking of peace on Russia's part. It would be a cruel piece of ostentation if Russia were dealing with a vanquished State. It is mere presumptuous folly in dealing with a first-class Power, which no nation in the world has long braved with impunity; and which Russia, if she remember the miserable exhibition that she made against Turkey alone, can least of all afford to defy. Russia is acting as if there were to be no to-morrow in this affair; as if England had spent her last guinea, unmoored her last ship, furled her flag, and abandoned herself to the rule of a dynasty of Gladstones.

The opinion of the more than semi-official Monday Review is also a little encouraging:—

Perhaps the retirement of England on the Afghan frontier, the abandonment of Herat, the sacrifice of Berber and Khartoum, and the deliverance of Suakim to Turkey, mark the lowest point of undeniable decay in England's power and credit. However little Great Britain may have counted on the sympathies of the Continent, civilized States could not but consider it gratifying, if a nation, placed by its own strength and merits at the head of universal civilisation, should recover from its prostration, and once again influence Europe by the signs of its political resurrection.

Can we realize the idea that we are thus patronized, patted on the back, by the Government of Austria. Perhaps this is their way—a good deal more dignified than Mr. Gladstone's abject apology—of noticing the gross and deliberate insult offered by the present Premier to one of our staunchest allies.

WE are glad to observe, from the usual circular of Messrs. G. White and Co., that the New Season's Teas, both from China and Assam, are fully equal to last year's produce. In Ceylon, however, complaint is made of the scarcity of the fuller-flavoured kinds.

The Cairo correspondent of the Temps has sent to that newspaper an account of the capture of Khartoum by an eye-witness, Ahmed Mohammed Saleh, a sergeant of the Egyptian army, who was in the neighbourhood of the Palace occupied by General Gordon, but has just escaped from the conquered town. He arrived safe at Assouan on the 27th of April last. His narrative, literally translated from the Arabic, is as follows:—

"Khartoum was on the point of being reduced to famine. All kinds of food were selling at exorbitant prices. In the course of one night the rebels, numbering 25,000, under the command of Walad el Nogan, filled up the ditches outside the town. That operation could be carried out in consequence of the treason of several of General Gordon's officers—principally Farag Pasha, Ahmed Bey Ali Gelab, and Hassan Bey el Bagnischni.

"At day-break, while the inhabitants were still asleep, the soldiers of Mohammed Ahmed entered the town, shouting, and began to massacre all those whom they met. Then they attacked the palace of the Governor-General, who, after having killed two of his assailants, was overpowered by numbers. His head was cut off and taken to the Mahdi. The slaughter and pillage were continued till mid day.

"Towards sunset, the Ababdehs, who acted as spies for the rebels, warned them of the approach of vessels coming from the north with soldiers and provisions. These troops, coming to the rescue of the town, were obliged to turn back; and two vessels were destroyed. If the English had reached Khartoum a few hours earlier they would have saved the town, which was well-fortified, and contained a garrison of 18,000 men. The greater number of these were killed. The Shaggiehs perished to a man in this slaughter.

"Three days after the occupation the rebels put to death Farig Pasha and Ahmed Bey. As regards the third traitor, Hassan Bey el Bagnischani, he was spared, and has joined the troops of the Mahdi."

The correspondent adds that the women of Khartoum were sold as slaves, after a number had been reserved by Mohammed Ahmed and some of his chiefs. The dead amounted to more than 20,000. Their bodies, under the instruction of Mohammed Ahmed, were lying unburied. The Mahdi lives at Omdurman, a village on the right bank of the Bahr el Abiad, commanding the route to Kordofan. He goes every Friday to say prayers at Khartoum.

HERE we have the old corvée, or forced labour, system, with a vengeance. The Indian Spectator says:—It would be absurd to say that Government encourages the system of impressed labour. But all the same the system obtains here and there. It is an engine of torture in the hands of official underlings, especially in the mofussil and some of the native States. What occurs in the districts occurs on a smaller scale in towns. Even this enlightened city of Bombay is not quite free from impressed labour. Clerks and others in Government offices often ask the peons to do menial work at home. The peon has to go to the Sett's house morning and evening; sometimes to pass the night there attending upon the sick master, mistress or child. Fancy a sepahibahadur working as sentry during day and as dry nurse at night! Is this not the usual experience of many a Dhond and Pandu? And the head of the department often wonders why some of "these niggers" always sleep at office!

THE well-known "organ of trade," the Akbari-Soudagar, condemns the conduct of some natives who have been converting their Government promissory and currency notes into silver and gold on account of the strained relations between the English and the Russians. The paper charges these people with cowardice, and endeavours to give an encouraging account of English prowess, wealth, and strength.

WE heartily concur with Bengal Public Opinion, which paper, commenting in the recent attack by the Arabs on General McNeill's division, says that the bravery and dutiful behaviour of our troops is the only redeeming feature in this unfortunate and scandalous affair. It is sad to contemplate that the Government have not done their duty properly by these brave sons of Mars. An extraordinary issue of the Gazette of India ought long ago to have been published, acknowledging the services of the Indian troops. The Times of India is very rightly indignant at the slight that has been put by the Government in ignoring the gallantry of these troops altogether.

THE HOTEL METROPOLE.

We are much pleased to record the unequalled success of the concert given last evening at the above magnificent establishment, for the benefit of the Egyptian War Fund, and the Princess of Wales's branch of the National Aid Society. The splendid suites of rooms were filled by a brilliant company, and the magnitude of the building may be inferred from the fact that three military bands were simultaneously playing in various parts of it without the sounds in any way clashing.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, ever foremost in any good work, arrived, as usual, in good time, and the élite of London was thoroughly represented. The Royal party was conducted over the several parts of the building, the distinctive features of which were pointed out.

Much had been heard of the furnishing and decoration of the Hôtel Métropole, but the majority of those who last night traversed the well-lighted corridors, illuminated by the electric light, with gas as an auxiliary, admitted that their expectations were surpassed. Everything to the smallest detail has been executed in an artistic manner—everything is solid and substantial. The vestibule, with its mosaic pavement and black marble columns, with gold capitals, was a promising beginning to the series of magnificent rooms thrown open. The principal dining-hall is a very spacious and light apartment, possessing a massive marble dado and numerous pilasters, with an elaborate ceiling. Following the direction of "keeping the right," the visitor on emerging from this hall suddenly found himself transported from the evidences of modern taste and luxury to the cosy charm and subdued illumination of a country mansion rich in oak fittings and carvings. Most of the rooms on the Whitehall side of the building—as well as the second and smaller entrance to the hotel situated here—are treated in this manner. The "King's Room" is a dining-hall with portraits of celebrated persons of the First James's period. Contiguous is the Whitehall Salon, perhaps the finest room in the building, a broad and lofty apartment in cream and gold. This may serve as a ball-room, or may be used separately from the hotel for public objects. A corridor running the full length of this section conducts to the drawing-room before mentioned, which is a reproduction of one of the Empress's private apartments in the Tuileries, and is very enticing with its hand painted silk panels, carved Portuguese marble mantelpieces, and rich window-hangings and upholstery. Next to this is the library, a comfortable Elizabethan room, and then comes the reception-room, reserved last night for the Royal visitors, which brings us round again to the Northumberland-avenue entrance. One of the leading attractions of the building is met with on the first floor. Here, amid a number of beautifully-furnished rooms en suite, is the "Marie Antoinette Chamber," announced to be the exact copy of the Marie Antoinette boudoir at Fontainebleau. This splendidly appointed room, with its gold chairs, white silk curtains, tasteful decoration, and finely painted panels (for the latter of which Messrs. Maple and Co., who have done the entire furnishing and the principal decorative work, specially engaged M. Galland, the Parisian artist), is an interesting spectacle in itself. The bed-rooms of the Hôtel Métropole, it may be added, number 600, the dining accommodation is equal to seating about 1,000 persons simultaneously, and seventy miles of electric light and bell-wire have been used in the building. The two deserving funds in aid of which the Hôtel Métropole was last night opened should benefit largely by the proceedings, inasmuch as the proprietors were at the cost of the refreshments included in the charge for tickets, the staff, the electric lighting, and other incidental expenses.

WE understand that a picture of General Gordon by Lowes Dickinson, is completed; it is entitled "The Last Watch," the scene being laid at Khartoum. With the sanction of the family, who have lent every assistance and taken deep interest in the progress of the picture, it is now on view exhibited at the British Gallery, Pall Mall, opposite Marlborough House. The profits of exhibition and engraving will be added to the Gordon Memorial Fund.

We have received from Messrs. Letts and Co., a map (included in Part IV. of their Popular Atlas) of Persia and Afghanistan, which, though on a small scale, is exceedingly clear, and enables the intelligent reader of the news of the day to see at a glance why Yakoub Khan (in this matter differing from his relative the Ameer of Cabul) is inclined to attach importance to the Afghan possession of Penjeh, which our Government, pusillanimous as usual, have persuaded Abdurrahman to abandon to the Russians. This map will be useful as a "Companion to the newspaper" in the almost certain eventuality of war breaking out.

WE have before observed that we can thoroughly depend on "our American Cousin" putting into practice, whenever his judgment is not warped by prejudice, the old saying that "Blood is thicker than water." We commend to the notice of our readers the annexed, which is being widely circulated, and which came into our hands by the merest accident:—A concert is being organised by a number of American ladies in London in aid of the branch of the National Relief Fund for sick and wounded soldiers in the Sudan, which is under the direction of H.R.H. the Princess of Wales. The concert will take place at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday, June 9th, at 9.30 p.m., in the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, and other members of the Royal family—who graciously give it their patronage; and the interesting feature is, that all the performers, both amateur and artist, will be American. Full details and particulars will be shortly be published. Tickets—£1 1s. and 10s. 6d.—may be procured from the American ladies residing in London; at St. James's Hall; and from the principal concert agents.

OBITUARY.—The Times of the 15th records the death at the age of sixty-four of the Rev. Dr. Henry Abraham Stern, a German of Hebrew descent, who was, for more than forty years, one of the missionaries of the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews. The reverend gentleman received the degree of D.D. from the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1881. He was ordained deacon in 1844 by the Bishop of Jerusalem, and admitted to priest's orders by the Bishop of London (Dr. Blomfield) in 1849. Dr. Stern was formerly a missionary in Persia, Arabia, and Turkey. Though an earnest man, and zealous on behalf of his society and the cause which it represents, it is doubtful if his death would have been thought worthy of record, but for the accident of his having been called, in the ordinary discharge of duty, to Abyssinia, where he incurred the displeasure of King Theodore, and was imprisoned in Magdala. It was to obtain his release, and that of his fellow-captives, that Mr. Rassam and Lieutenant Prideaux, then respectively first and second assistants to General Sir William (then Brigadier) Coghlan at Aden, were sent on a mission to Theodore, and by him detained. The result the despatch of a force under Lord Napier of Magdala, the death of Theodore at the fall of the fortress, and the education in England (under the care of Captain Speedy), and subsequent death of his son Alamayoo, are now almost matters of ancient history; but are involuntarily recalled to mind by the death of even one of the minor actors in the tragedy.

Chit Chat.

It cannot be otherwise than a matter of regret that the import of aniline dyes into India is steadily on the increase, to the injury of their native rivals, which are being gradually supplanted throughout the length and breadth of the whole peninsula. One colour and one alone—green indigo—holds its own. The preparation is a secret with the tribes who use it, and science has not as yet been successful in finding a substitute. Alhamdu lillah! God be praised!

It is publicly asserted that the alarming prevalence of cholera in Calcutta is due entirely to preventible causes; but "no neglect can be too flagrant, no abuses too scandalous, no breach of duty too flagrant to be condoned by a timid Government and an insolent Secretariat, both of them, it might almost be supposed, in a hurry to get safely to the hills, and to forget, in the pure and serene atmosphere of Darjeeling, alike the conflicts and the miseries of the mismanaged metropolis." Rather a heavy bill of indictment, but is it justified by facts? For the credit of humanity it may be hoped there is some exaggeration or partisan feeling.

SOCIETY has been terribly shocked in India by the circumstance that a lady of rank, who had recently been with her husband on a tour in India, threw herself out of the cabin window of the vessel on which she was returning home. Severe illness had deranged the unhappy sufferer's mind. Every possible effort was made to save her from drowning, but in vain. This is fearfully sad.

THE native servants with Sir Peter Lumsden's mission have behaved wonderfully well. With the repugnance of their race to carry warm clothing they braved the fury of an Afghan winter with the courage of heroes. The bare mention of Indian summer costume with the thermometer below zero makes the blood freeze in the veins.

GLAD tidings for manufacturers. A great demand has set in at Mozambique for Indian cotton goods, on the score of durability and cheapness. The only drawback is the Portuguese fiscal system, which acts as a blight upon all wholesome trade.

OVER one hundred years ago a certain Colonel Scott lost his wife and all his children in one day by cholera. Quitting his home he wandered forth no one knew where, and no one has ever discovered, not a trace of him from that day to this having been found. His bungalow remains now exactly as it was a century ago. What a strange romance in real life!

SAVE me from my friends! A worthy householder in the land of the Turkomans was aroused one night by unaccountable sounds in his house. Rushing downstairs he arrived in time to see a robber making his exit through a hole in the mud wall. Instantly seizing the thief by the only part of him which was visible—his legs—the lord of the mansion began to scream lustily for assistance; on the other side of the wall the fellow's comrades pulled bravely to get their companion through the hole, but in vain. At length fearing detection should one of their band fall into the hands of justice, they quickly and ruthlessly cut off his head, and decamping with their prey left the unhappy thief to be pulled through the hole a headless and therefore unrecognisable corpse!

A HORRIBLE tale comes from Bombay. The Hindoos, as is well known, burn their dead; the stench is said to be awful, but to add to the loathsomeness of the scene bits of charred flesh are carried away with the wind, and a case has been known of severe inflammation owing to a piece of a corpse getting into the eye of a passer-by. Yet we want to imitate the example in England. And is this mode of getting rid of "our friends" quite in accordance with medical science? We question whether the gases arising from the burning of diseased bodies are not injurious to health as well as unpleasant to the smell.

BUDDHISM is in the ascendant. Not long ago a clergyman from England embraced that religion; and now Miss Mary Flinn, of Colombo, has accepted a faith which she found "most in accordance with her own reason and common sense." A newspaper, too, is to be started in Europe advocating the claims of Buddhism as the "religion of the future." Good news this for the Liberation Society.

FOREST Conservancy in Tanna seems in a bad way—or, to speak in more measured terms, "a very disagreeable and undesirable state of things has been called into existence." It is this. The people for generations have been accustomed to do pretty much as they liked in the woods, cutting, lopping, and carrying away whatever they could lay their hands upon in the way of firewood, &c. When a department was organised to protect the forests and raise a revenue from them, naturally enough matters began to be uncomfortable for the villagers, and hence friction and disagreeables came on the tapis. But is there not enough and to spare for both parties? Surely nature is sufficiently bountiful with her favours to enable Government to meet the requirements of a few cultivators.

SOCIETY at Mahabeshwar is sorely puzzled. A scheme has been propounded to have a series of fortnightly dances "financed by subscription;" but the ladies predominate over the "nobles" there in the ratio of 20 to 1. Nil desperandum, however, is the motto of the day, and all young men of "presentable appearance" who are acquaintance with the rudiments of dancing are requested to "alleviate the sufferings of female humanity by aiding and abetting" their terpsichorean endeavours to while away an hour. What if one is not of "presentable appearance?"

DURING the Russian War orders were issued to the British troops not to fire on any women in the enemy's camp, an injunction which chanced to reach the ears of the "pious" Northerners, who, it is said, were equal to the occasion, and thenceforth used in numerous cases to go about disguised as members of the weaker sex. A smart proceeding on the part of Holy Russia.

THE dock works at Kidderpore have been stopped for want of funds, and £300,000 are accordingly thrown away. Who is responsible for such waste of public funds? Verily a Joseph Hume is needed in India.

ONE immediate result of the policy of surrender is already beginning to be felt. "While the talk in London," says the Pioneer, "is of compromises and negotiations, the strain upon the military resources of the country continues, and the expenditure to be provided for by the Financial Department grows larger and larger." Precisely; this is just what might have been expected, and the worst is not yet over.

It will be a source of satisfaction that a large number of torpedoes are ready to be laid down in the Hugli at the shortest notice. This is as it should be. Fancy the City of Palaces at the mercy of a hostile squadron!

If you leave your tea to be made by your "khansama" (factotum), you will experience "disappointment and dyspepsia"—a home truth, and a nice piece of alliteration.

ROMAN Catholicism seems at a discount on the Malabar coast. The inhabitants, to the tune of 500 persons of several villages, have recently come en bloc under the pastoral care and protection of a Protestant clergyman. The priests are, it is said, much enraged at this wholesale "perversion" from the true faith; but then the perverts are only humble fishermen—with souls, perhaps, but little more.

WILL not the British Government devote a few rupees a year to keep in order the tomb of Sivaji, the founder of the Mahratta Empire in India? In his day he was one of the most formidable antagonists who ever crossed swords with the British Government. Cannot their successors pay a slight tribute to the memory of a valiant warrior and dashing leader? Verbum sap.

It is generally supposed that the mongoose (a species of ferret) is proof against snake bites. This is a popular delusion. That animal's immunity arises from the surprising quickness and agility with which it seizes its antagonist before the deadly fangs of the offender can come into play.

BURMESE custom gives to an outraged husband the right to cut off his faithless and fickle spouse's hair, and retain her in his establishment. We in this country get a divorce, and turn madame to the rightabout. In this instance West has the best of East.

AN old "Joe Miller" will sometimes bear repeating. Here is an instance. A medical man, deposing to the injuries he had found on a certain individual who had been badly handled in a street fight, certified that the person in question was suffering from "a severe contusion of the integuments under the left orbit, with great extravasation of blood, and ecchymosis in the surrounding cellular tissue, which was in a tumefied state." This was the professional mode of saying that the fellow had a black eye.

To get intoxicated on spirits which pay duty is bad enough, but to reel through the streets with a half empty eau-de-Cologne bottle at one's mouth, and cheat the Exchequer, is horribly awful; and it tends to cast a slur upon an universally-used perfume. What a shame!

AT Pondicherry they have had rain but for an hour since the 1st of January. What a nice place to live in!

OUR RELATIONS WITH TURKEY.

WE cannot help thinking that, ever since a vindictive statesman, nursing his own pique rather than his country's interests, cursed Turkey (in language as severe as ever Balak asked Balaam to employ) in a series of diatribes the length of which, printed on end, we have seen calculated to amount to something portentous, the tendency of the average Briton has been rather to look on the unspeakable Turk as an objectionable member of the European Club. We helped him, with his full consent, in the Crimean War; we helped him, without his consent, on our own behalf, in the last Russo-Turkish War (in which, but for the presence of our fleet at Prinkipo, there cannot be a doubt that the Jingo boast, "The Russians shall not have Constantinople," would have been signally falsified), and it has been the tradition, the invariable tradition of our diplomacy, to support the said "unspeakable." Naturalists tell us that nothing exists without a reason, and we may presume that this diplomatic tradition had, at one time, some raison d'être. May it not be worth while to inquire what this raison d'être was, and whether it may not, even now, have some claim to attention?

Whatever, in the first instance, the interests of trade in the Black Sea may have had to do with our desire to keep Russia, at all costs, out of the possession of the Dardanelles, is not now the question; though it may fairly be remarked that, since the introduction of free trade in corn, we draw a very large proportion of our supplies of that indispensable article through those Straits which might, if in the hands of an unfriendly Power, be closed ad hoc in order to help in starving us out.

The real question in hand is the road to India. There are four ways: (a) that through Persia and Russia, just taken by Mr. Stephens, unavailable during a great part of the year on account of snow, and assuredly unavailable in case of war with Russia; (b) that round the Cape, which, with ships like the Austral, or, better still, the Great Eastern (which latter any sensible British Government would unhesitatingly buy—it could be had for a song—and fit up as a transport) need not exceed in duration some five weeks; (c) the Suez Canal, which any hostile vessel, laden with round polished granite blocks, which no grapple could seize, and sunk, could block for weeks; and (d) the Euphrates Valley route, at present, though, we hope not for ever, a thing of the future.

Now, of these routes two pass through Turkish territory. We say two, for it is the merest fatuity wholly to ignore Turkey's influence in Egypt, and, therefore, over the Canal. Let it never be forgotten that the late Khedive, Ismail, abdicated at a moment's notice at the behest of his Suzerain, the Sultan of Roum.

Something, then, of glamour attaches to this Potentate's name. Is it wise, even on this ground, to alienate him, and to throw him into the hands of a hostile Power, and that Power his and our most implacable foe? Not that his dignity, or his influence as Khalif over the world of Islam, has alone to be considered, important as these are to an Empire comprising many millions of Mussulmans.

It is not unreasonable to suppose that the goodwill of a sovereign, occupying, both by religious ascendancy and by territorial dominion, a position so exceptional, and one so fraught with influence, would be sought by any English Cabinet. How far this is from having been the case under the present Administration is, unfortunately, matter of notoriety. The revilers of the Turk have been promoted, his sympathisers (with the sole exception of Sir H. Elliot, who has an influential Whig connection,) snubbed, or removed from office; the Turk himself treated as a pariah, an outcast from the European family.

At any time, and under any Turkish Sultan, this would have been an indiscreet, even a fatuous, course of procedure (the word "policy" is wholly inappropriate to any doings of the present Ministry), but, at the present time, and with the present Sultan, it is absolutely ruinous.

At the present time. We know not in how brief a period we may be called on to draw the sword; that the period can be a long one, no sensible or well-informed person for a moment believes. We have, in Turkey, a State, the integrity and independence of which it has always been the policy of England to maintain. The fact that it is of primary importance to this country to have in the East of Europe and in Asia a friendly Mahomedan Power able to maintain itself in the East, a Power capable of exerting, not only a political, but a quasi-religious, influence, was, to a long succession of statesmen, who were really anxious for the interest of their country, a sufficient reason for adopting, and for maintaining, that traditional policy. It is, probably, one of the chief reasons why the present Government have so signally abandoned it.

We have said that the circumstances of the present time make it ruinous to turn aside the old friendship of England and Turkey, hitherto the common enemies of a common foe. The character of the present Sultan brings this out into even stronger relief. We have to deal, not with a respectable aggregate of Ministers called the Porte, but with a man in the true sense of the term, a being of decision of character, and who knows his own mind.

Hear Sir H. Layard, than whom there can be no more competent witness, and who thus speaks in the Contemporary Review for this month, in an essay which well deserves attentive study:—

No previous Sultan has had more influence, or has taken a more direct share in public affairs than the present one. Formerly the Sultan, upon almost every question, except one of very great magnitude . . . allowed his Ministers to pursue the course they thought fit. . . But the present Sultan has taken the direction of affairs completely into his own hands; not only the greatest, but the smallest questions are referred to him and decided by him. During the time I was at Constantinople, I may say conscientiously that Turkey was indebted for nearly every improvement and every reform to the Sultan personally. . . . I always found him ready to listen to advice and to act on it if in his power.

Showing how the Sultan has been grossly insulted by the present Government (to the omission to send an Ambassador to his Court we have already, in a previous issue, referred) Sir Henry points out what this deliberately offensive conduct has cost us. Arabi, he says, would have obeyed the Sultan's summons, and the Egyptian war would have been saved. Could we restore our ancient friendship, we could forward the cause of civilisation, and obtain improvements and reforms promoting the welfare of the Christian and other populations. We should have a powerful ally, who could place at our disposal a first-rate body of men, in the event of that war with Russia "which must inevitably take place sooner or later."

And all these advantages we have sacrificed to the personal pique of a man who, though possessing exceptional abilities, and a capable financier, is yet, as a speaker, turgid, bombastic, verbose, and of set purpose unintelligible, never using a phrase which is not susceptible of plural interpretations, an unsurpassable adept in the art of "turning his back upon himself," devoid of the prevision of the future, and intuitive perception of the true bearing of present facts; in a word, destitute of every statesman-like instinct!

There is much reason to believe that a continuation of the line of conduct which Lord Beaconsfield pursued towards Turkey would have conduced, more than strikes casual observers, to the retention by England of the proud position—yet dignified rather than proud, for it was offensive to the legitimate pride of no other nation—which our country held at the close of the Beaconsfield Administration. We had not then first insulted, then apologised to, and finally alienated, every European Power whose friendship was worth having; we had not, in fact, played in politics the Major Wellington de Boots of the stage, alternately blustering and retreating. Respected by our colleagues in Europe, whose "concert" was then in favour of not against us, we occupied a position nearly analogous to that in which Cromwell and Pitt placed us. May the prestige—a word meaning a very real thing, however much purblind politicians may deny its existence—of our country be restored ere it be too late!

"THE GOLDEN ROAD TO SOUTH-WESTERN CHINA."

A most interesting lecture under this heading, delivered, however, to a not very large, and somewhat apathetic, audience, was given at the Rooms of the Society of Arts last Friday by Professor R. K. Douglas, of King's College, clearly an enthusiast as regards the subject-matter of his lecture.

The extraordinary fertility, and consequent vast commercial importance, of the provinces known as Szechuen and Yunnan, has long been notorious, and their inaccessibility to Europeans scarcely less so. A glance at the map will show that the tract is most abundantly watered, the larger rivers running chiefly in a southerly direction. The geological value, if any, of the barren mountains which confine the valleys of these streams has never been exhaustively explored; but the valleys themselves "are teeming with populous villages, towns, and cities, and yield large and profitable crops in return for the labour bestowed on them." These valleys can, the lecturer observed, best be reached by following the course of the streams. No other route, he urged, "has fully answered the expectations of its advocates." The long waterway of 1,750 miles up the Yang-tse renders that approach wearisome, and practically useless for the rapid transit required if these provinces are to be developed. The route now used from Burma is that via Bhamo, which is characterised by the well-known traveller, Mr. Baber, as "the worst possible route, with the least possible trade." "I do not mean that it would be impossible to construct a railway. A high authority informs me," adds Mr. Baber, "that if shareholders will find money they will always find an engineer to spend it. By piercing half-a-dozen Mont Cenis tunnels, and erecting a few Menai bridges, the road from Burma to Yunnanfu could doubtless be much improved." Yet it is from the Burmese side that Professor Douglas thinks the attempt should be made. But he would begin further south, where the hills confining the valleys no longer need "Mont Cenis tunnels," but, as is the case on the lower centres of most rivers of any magnitude, gradually sink to a nearer approach to the level of the plain. Starting from Maulmein or Bangkok in Siam he would have a road (preferentially, of course, a railroad) up the valley of the Menam to Zimmé or Lakhon, and from thence onwards through the Shan States of Kiang-tung, and Kiang-tung to Szemao, in Yunnan.

It will not escape our readers that this is practically the same route as that so long and so persistently advocated by the late Captain Sprye, and to the "pushing" of which he really devoted his entire life. Theoretically easy, and doubtless practically feasible enough as is the route, it is open to question whether any body of capitalists can be found to venture on the vast expenditure which must be incurred, and must, during the construction of the line, remain awhile unprofitable.

Exceptional as is the fertility of Szechuen and Yunnan (a desire on the part of the French to get a footing in them by ascending the rivers from Tonkin is believed by many to have been the real causa causans of the Franco-Chinese war, now happily terminated), the wildness of the tribes through whose territory much of the track must pass, and the vast distances to be traversed, make its completion, perhaps even its commencement, a thing of the distant future. But those who heard Professor Douglas on Friday cannot but cordially recognize in him an advocate as earnest as, and more able and learned than, Captain Sprye, and as cordially thank him for anew directing attention to the subject.

WHEN we read of cartridges the first of which jams in the barrel, exposing the unhappy user thereof to be bayoneted if in European, or speared if in Asiatic or African warfare, of swords which bend instead of piercing or cutting (unlike the Damascus blade of old, which could bend, pierce, and cut), of bayonets—so-called—which crumple up like lead if they touch anything harder than a bit of pasteboard, of ships of war which cannot propel themselves, we feel inclined to fold our arms and say it is "kismet"—fate. Quem Deus vult, &c. But this conviction need not make us forget that "Jupiter helps those who help themselves." We are not going to say that it is the Government who make a "pot of money" by supplying our men with "Brummagem" articles: some one does. We never hear of officers' swords which cannot pierce an adversary as though he were a sheet of brown paper; nor of officers' revolvers which fail to go off. Officers pay a fair price for a good article; the Government could get the same article at a much cheaper rate on account of the great scale on which they require supplies. Why don't they?

To procure these at a moderate rate, in their own manufacturing, has been the Will-of-the-Wisp of successive Governments. The solution of the problem, quod erat faciendum, has never been accomplished.

We therefore heartily welcome a competitor in the manufacture of ammunition, who, like the British Cart-ridge and Ammunition Company (whose advertisement will be found at page 454) starts under favourable auspices, with apparently abundant means, and with every facility for carrying on, at no less than five considerable factories, a large business. That such a business, honourably conducted, will be patronized by the Government, we hope; that the public will support it we are sure. That it is lucrative is clear from one fact, that the shares of the cognate business of Eley and Sons, which not long since (to use a slang City phrase) "went into limitation," that is, became a limited company, are at a premium of 260 per cent., a figure which would doubtless be greatly exceeded in time of actual war.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HISTORY OF THE INDIAN MUTINY.—RECOLLECTIONS OF WOOLWICH.*

Books on the Indian Mutiny are very numerous, but they are also generally very discursive. The latest issued is not, however, open to much blame in this respect, being an unvarnished account in chronological order of the events of the Mutiny by an officer who was himself an eyewitness of a large portion of the scenes represented, and well acquainted with the people and the country. The history of the siege of Delhi, certainly the main event of the mutiny, is chiefly compiled from the notes made at the time by General Sir Charles Reid. Hence Colonel Dewé White's information may be generally relied on, and his work will suit those people who prefer to draw deductions for themselves. The "Recollections of Woolwich" extend from 1850 to the present time, and will be found interesting to officers of artillery and ordnance.

KEENE'S HISTORY OF HINDUSTAN.†

Another history of Hindustan! many of our readers will say. Readers of the history now under review will find that they will not do wrong in carefully perusing it. Mr. Keene has, indeed, been compelled to compress within the space of a not very large volume a narrative of events extending over some centuries—events to do full justice to which would require nearly three times the space. But in these times of life by railway and telegraph few would read the three tomes, whereas the one volume can, to use a medical phrase, be "readily assimilated." Thoroughly to understand the process by which a race gradually emerges from subjection to despotic government into a state in which the interests of the people—in reality, of course, identical with those of the ruler—are, in however slight a degree, recognised, is not an easy task, even in Europe. To place it clearly before the reader is one even more difficult. The various stages through which Germany, Italy, France, our own country, and (as more especially Oriental in its feelings and habits) Spain, have successively passed, have been well, though not always with the same clearness of perception or perspicuity of delineation, traced; usually by indigenous historians. But, when we come to the East, materials are much less copious, and the historian is, as it were, called on, like the Hebrews of old, to make bricks without straw. Nor is the reason far to seek. The chroniclers of Europe in earlier times, almost without exception, were ecclesiastics. Buried in the consecrated seclusion of a monastery, they put down on paper—or on that which did duty for it—such facts as came to their knowledge by report. Safe from secular interference, they recorded, without much bias, except in favour of the Church, what they heard. Froissart and Comines are, perhaps, the most striking exceptions substantiating the accuracy of this general rule.

But in the East our materials are of a wholly different character. It is from independent chroniclers that we hear of the prosperity of England; how, in spite of all drawbacks, the people were the least oppressed, and justice the best administered, of any country in Europe. In the East we find, until the time of Sir Thomas Roe, few independent observers, for, pace Colonel Yule and Mr. Markham, we can hardly consider Marco Polo, however geographically valuable, as such; and the sources of history are too often the secretaries and hangers-on of sovereigns, bound, by the tenure of their position, to glorify their master, to "stick to him through thick and thin." Hence the disintegration of their narratives, the "smashing-up" of the shell to get to the kernel, is the very first work of the would-be narrator of fact. Just as, in the mediæval times of Europe, we hear of battles and sieges, of popes, emperors, kings, dukes, and podestàs, so in the East, and for the same reason, history seems to be an endless succession of khalifs, sultans, beys, rajàs, and so on—capital knowledge for a competitive examination, and about as practically useless as most similar requirements. The people are simply nowhere. They existed, for they propagated their race, paid taxes, and cultivated the land. But they were as purely money-producing machines as those which coin the sovereigns and shillings at the Mint.

What has been wanted has been a work which should give a fair idea of the condition, during various periods, of the toiling millions of Hindustan.

And, though the bulk of Mr. Keene's work is necessarily devoted to the successions of dynasties and of their respective members, we are much pleased to see in it a real attempt to trace, with reasonable conciseness, yet in a comparatively popular way, the gradual amelioration, during a period of many centuries, of the condition of the people, properly so-called. It is to these parts of Mr. Keene's work that we more especially solicit our readers' attention.

Really substantial steps towards establishing the rights of property were introduced in the first half of the sixteenth century by Sher Sháh, himself an Afghan, and therefore, unless ethnology mislead us, not improbably an Israelite. The account (p. 73) of his proceedings when first placed in power as what we should call Commissioner, in Behar, is striking. Here he, for the first time, came to the fore. "The union of humanity with energy is," as our author truly remarks, "most exceptional among Asiatic Statesmen, for their conduct is usually the result of impulse, and is determined by the prevailing turn of individual character." On taking charge, the Khan (he did not assume the title of Sháh till he was de facto Emperor) "assembled the officials and heads of the community. To the former he said that he had set his heart on the welfare of the tract, that their own interests would be as much concerned as his reputation. In the last resource success depended on the humble peasantry." Accordingly, the cultivator was to have a fixed assessment, and the privilege (then all but unheard-of) of paying in money or kind; the collectors were to be remunerated by a cash payment; and "I warn you," said Sher Khan to the latter, "that if the people complain that you take more than is so fixed, I shall myself take part in the audit, and shall debit the excess to you." This is, it seems to us, the way to get a thriving, contented, and loyal agricultural class—"a bold peasantry, their country's pride."

The operation of Sher Sháh's reforms was extended, as his power augmented, far beyond Behar. On a larger scale they seem to have been effective. Some of his "notions" have been found of service at the present day. Thus—and this is doubtless the origin of the khoj, or tracking, system—"if thefts or robberies could not be brought home to the actual offenders, the heads of the commune in whose borders the offence occurred were called on to satisfy the authorities that the offenders had not found harbour with them, and to trace them to another village;" a plan which might well be adopted in Ireland even at the present day.

Another arrangement of Sher Sháh's, though doubtless good in his time, is less so now-a-days, yet it has, apparently, commended itself to our Indian authorities, who generally remove a man from a district just as he has all but mastered the details of its administration. "No officials were allowed to remain in the same place more than two years."

It is needless to say that, "as the course of true love never did run smooth," so the system inaugurated by Sher Sháh was often interrupted in its operation by something more serious than "lovers' quarrels." The whole framework of the State was repeatedly shaken, yet somewhat remained, and "this farsighted man, even after his death and the subversion of his dynasty, remained the originator of all that was done by mediæval rulers for the good of the Indian people."

It is because we so entirely agree in Mr. Keene's estimate of the value of Sher Sháh's reforms, and because we do not think that his well-merited glory should be wholly absorbed in the greater effulgence of his successor, Akbar, that we have specially mentioned his reign.

With the reign of Akbar we come to a period, divided, indeed, by few years, but yet virtually by many, from those which preceded it. Mr. Keene has given much, but by no means too much, space to it. We shall, as in the case of Sher Sháh, remark chiefly on what affects "the taxpayers," to use a modern, but inaccurate, phrase. Akbar was, in the best sense, "a Liberal." Such regulations as that, "though the suppression of rebels is one of the duties of rulers, yet the persecution of their unoffending women and children is unlawful" (though the actual words are a gloss of the commentator, yet) express a statesmanlike feeling which the destroyers of wells in Egypt might do well to follow. It is in this reign—a fact which renders it for ever memorable—that we first see Christians openly received (1576) at an Indian Court. Fancy Protestants being received at Mary's, or Romanists at Elizabeth's, Court! Akbar was much ahead of us in toleration.

Akbar it was, too, who, following out Sher Sháh's perception of "the benefit that might be expected from leaving a definite margin between the State's demand and the expenses of cultivation," first caused the compilation of a Domesday book, which, as Mr. Keene observes, "formed the basis of that system which, under the name of 'settlement,' still prevails in most parts of India."

We have thus traced, in company with our author, the gradual improvement of the state of the people of Hindustan up to a point where the mediæval history of the country may be said to end, and its modern history to begin. Mr. Keene here, properly enough, draws the line, reserving the events of a later period for another book. Having already exceeded the ordinary limits of an article, we shall follow his example; and, while thanking him for the pleasure which the perusal of the first book of his history has afforded us, reserve for another issue any remarks we may have to make on the period comprised in the second book.

"I have lived, as it were, in camp more than half my life, and I am horrified to see the accounts of the cartridges jamming in the rifles in the Soudan, thus leaving the men unarmed in the midst of action. . . . It is surely most important that our men should be efficiently armed, and that none but the best cartridges should be served out to those in the field."—See Daily Telegraph, May 2.

PROSPECTUS.

The necessity for the formation of this Company in times like the present needs no argument. The Times leader of May 8th, 1885, contains the following significant paragraphs:—"The impression is growing throughout Europe that although the negotiations at present pending between England and Russia will probably lead for the time to the maintenance of peace, the reprieve, as it has been called, will not long defer the evil day. . . . War is held to be inevitable, though diplomacy will probably stave off an immediate rupture." Should these words be prophetic, and war be suddenly thrust upon us, the resources of the Empire may be strained to the utmost limit, consequently every precaution should be taken, both politically and commercially, against the chance of having to rely upon other countries for our war supplies.

Rumour and report have already given it that orders for millions of Cartridges have been forwarded from this country to America, and that at a time of great need in England, hence it is fair to conclude that only a combination of Capital is required to secure at home work for the artisan and handsome profit for the investor. Moreover, it seems probable that the entire stock of Government "Boxer" Cartridges will have to be replaced by new solid drawn Cartridges, suitable either for small arms or machine guns of the same calibre.

No adequate estimate can be formed at the present time of either business to be done or profit to be made, as no just calculation can be arrived at of the possible extent of the demand for small arm ammunition likely to arise; but with war being prosecuted in the Soudan, with the Afghan frontier dispute not yet settled, the calling out of the Militia and the Reserves, the clouds in Africa, and the numberless other signs and portents, it is safe and fair to assume a large and steady trade.

That in times of peace a business of this character can be made highly remunerative, and yield a good and sufficient return for the investment, the illustration of the success of the business of Messrs. Eley Brothers, Limited, at the head of this Prospectus is sufficient evidence, the Shares in which Company have been quoted on the Stock Exchange within the last few days at upwards of 260 per cent. premium, and which, of course, could form no criterion for times of war.

The Company have secured by Agreement the right to purchase and work either or all of the following properties, so that no unreasonable delay need be apprehended in the manufacture and delivery of cartridges:—

1. A Freehold Property situated at Ponder's End, Middlesex, on the banks of the River Lea, with a river frontage of upwards of 1,100 feet, adjacent to the Ponder's End Station, of the Great Eastern Railway, and to the Government Works, Enfield Lock, possessing plant, machinery and buildings, capable of being adapted to the purposes of this Company, and valued at £57,000.

2. The Mill Lane Loading Manufactory, comprising loading, filling, wrapping, and other sheds, with Magazines and Stores at Ward End, Birmingham, and containing about 4 acres of land, held on renewable lease, and licensed by the Government for loading and filling.

3. The Andover Street Works, Birmingham, with plant and machinery adapted for making Metallic Cartridge Shells, at present capable of turning out one million cartridges per month, and which, with an additional outlay, can be increased to 2,000,000 cartridges per month.

4. The lease of nine acres of land, situated at Dartford, in the neighbourhood of the E. C. Powder Company's Works, and the well-known Powder Works of Messrs. Pigou, Wilks & Laurence, Limited; also licensed by the Government for the loading and filling of cartridges.

It is proposed to secure the best skill that England and America can yield, and the most modern machinery.

The greatest despatch and promptitude, and the best material will be the principal objects of the Directors, with which view the management will be under the control of efficient gentlemen, and watchful care will be exercised over every department of the Manufactory.

SPORTING CARTRIDGES.—This Company proposes to give every attention to the manufacture of Sporting Cartridges, of which many millions are used annually in Great Britain and Ireland, and a large export trade carried on to other countries at a profitable rate.

Agencies and Depots will be established as occasion may demand at the following places:—Liverpool, Glasgow, Hamburg, Lisbon, Milan, Paris, Constantinople, Calcutta, Bombay, Colombo, Singapore, Hong Kong, Sydney, Melbourne, Port Elizabeth, Graham's Town, Pretoria, Montreal, Ontario, Buenos Ayres, New Zealand.

The following documents will be open to inspection at the Offices of the Solicitor to the Company between the hours of twelve and three during the issue of this Prospectus.

1. A Contract between Messrs. Wm. Edwards & Co. of the one part, and Mr. F. Archer Ludlow of the other part, dated the 20th April, 1885.
2. A Contract between Messrs. Wm. Edwards & Co. of the one part, and Mr. Francis Day of the other part, dated the 18th April, 1885.
3. A Contract between Messrs. Wm. Edwards & Co. of the one part, and Mr. B. T. Moore of the other part, dated the 1st May, 1885.
4. A Contract between Messrs. Wm. Edwards & Co. of the one part, and Mr. Sam. J. Elder as Trustee, for and on behalf of the British Cartridge and Ammunition Company, Limited, of the other part, dated the 9th day of May, 1885.

All monies paid in upon application for Shares, not allotted, will be returned without deduction of any kind.

THE

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to No. 6, LANCASTER PLACE, STRAND, W.C.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are indistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pearls and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & CO., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

TO J. T. DAVENPORT, London, 5, 1880.
DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cures EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MAY 26, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR last advices from Calcutta and Madras are of the 6th inst., from Bombay of the 8th. We cannot say that the week has brought any very decisive, or very hopeful, news. The centre of interest is still in London. Sir P. Lumsden has not yet arrived "in disgrace," as Lord Randolph Churchill calls it, and as that gallant and most able officer will undoubtedly feel it, though our rulers may quibble and shuffle, as has been too much their wont, as to the phrase "repair to the metropolis."

Mr. Blowitz, of the Times, gives to-day a long account of what is "believed" by him to be accurate as regards Lord Rosebery's visit or "mission" to Berlin. The only portion which will specially interest Indian readers is the following, which we quote verbatim, leaving them to supply as many grains of salt as may best suit their palate. For ourselves, we don't see the advantage of giving an adversary time for preparation, when a war is inevitable, and at best but postponed, aufgeschoben, nicht aufgehoben, to use a favourite phrase of the German Chancellor. This Government has so deeply offended him that we, more reluctantly than we can say, cannot help feeling the old distrust of the Greeks and their gifts. Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes. And this greatest man in Europe was ready, nay, anxious, to be England's staunchest friend! "Prince Bismarck observed that Lord Dufferin had been the first to notice and to inform his Government that the Ameer was a very dubious ally, and that the "buffer" policy had, he understood, been condemned by Lord Dufferin immediately after his meeting with the Ameer, as he saw that this would make England a dupe and entail sacrifices without an equivalent. The Prince consequently undertook to induce Russia to stay where she was long enough to give England time to fortify her Indian frontier, to revert to the policy of defending India in India, instead of expending blood and treasure in defending Afghanistan, and to create a frontier the more impassable inasmuch as Russia would always be a long way from her base, and for many generations could not even dream of aggression." This means abandoning Afghanistan, and renouncing all engagements with the Ameer. Is the nation prepared for this? Of the present state of the negotiations with Russia everyone is ignorant; it having, up to the rising of Parliament, been as impossible as usual to extract a straightforward answer on the subject from either Mr. Gladstone or Lord E. Fitzmaurice.

A CORRESPONDENT, who does not speak without knowledge of his subject, thus writes to us about the non-completion of the bridge over the Indus, known as the Sukkur-Bukkur-Rohri Bridge. Independently of the facts mentioned by him, we have reason to believe that the speedy completion of this important undertaking would be true economy:—

The dilatory manner in which this work is being carried on cannot be too severely condemned. The want of a bridge over the Indus river is a serious hindrance to the transport of our soldiers and of war materiel. The Russians will laugh at our misdirected efforts to prepare for war. It is feared that more than three years may elapse before the bridge will be opened; it ought to have been finished in 1882. Will you kindly stir up the India Office on this subject, and invite its attention to the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 8th April, page 397? At present, double rolling-stock is required; locomotives cannot be easily transferred from one bank of the Indus to the other. The break on this important railway, which connects Karachi with the Punjab, causes enormous expenses. It is calculated that the extra expenditure will amount to more than the total expenditure necessary to complete the work.

WE all know that cricket is much played in India. We propose, indeed, from time to time, to print the scores of the chief Indian matches. We also know that the Marylebone Club is supposed to represent the élite of the game. Now, to play the Marylebone Club has always been held to be equivalent to playing an unknown quantity: let us say the letter X. You may meet in the field an Eleven good, bad, or, very often, indifferent. We cannot help thinking that this might be avoided by the exercise of a little care, and a greater variety in the fixtures of matches. We have had Australians, and splendidly have they acquitted themselves. We have had Canadians—though never, so far as we can remember, a thoroughly representative Canadian eleven;—but we have never, we think, had a team of Anglo-Indians. In the days when no competition existed, and when the Indian services contained the pick of the public schools of England, we would—were it not tempting Providence to bet—have readily backed them in the field against the world. Perhaps things may have altered now (though many a competition-wallah has shown his ability to handle the willow), but we think an Anglo-Indian Eleven would make a good figure in the field, as it certainly would be a novelty in the programme of the M.C.C., and a means of drawing together cricketers of the three Presidencies, and thereby, possibly, originating many a pleasant meeting—pleasant, not for cricket alone, but for croquet, lawn tennis, and, above all, for the life-long business of flirtation—in mofussil stations where all but the last-named have been as rare as an angel's—we beg pardon, a Bishop's—visit. Why do not Anglo-Indians take heart of grace, and, even this year—they have a month to do it in—get up a team for Wimbledon? Many of them can "snuff a candle" at a good deal more than twelve paces.

WHILE on this topic of bringing together Anglo-Indians, we cannot but regret that they seem to "cotton to one another" so much less than of yore. Even the clubs supposed to be wholly Anglo-Indian, which, at one time, hesitated to admit a barrister-judge of the Indian High Courts, and positively refused membership to gentlemen of the Indian Home Service, are now, to a great extent, filled by persons wholly unconnected with the East; while retired Indians are but too prone to sever—except in the matter of pension—their connection with the country by joining associations entirely unconnected with it. It is, in present times, a thing not unworthy of notice, that, while our Colonists are drawing more and more closely the bonds, not only of union with the mother-country, but also of inter-union among themselves, remembering that "union gives strength," our Anglo-Indians should "hang together" so little.

MR. CONDIE STEPHEN, though, perhaps, as young men are wont to be, a little overwhelmed by the civilities showered on him (by his Russian hosts) in his late journey from the borders of Afghanistan, has done good service in reminding us of the excellence of the horses—not alone in the Steppes, for this is known to everyone, but—throughout his route. When hundreds of pounds are being paid for a decent mount in the hunting field, and ordinary chargers are commanding huge prices, attention may well be directed to the apparently inexhaustible reservoir of horseflesh afforded by the Central Asian regions. We do not for a moment mean to say that these horses are either hunters or chargers, or that they have a pedigree a mile long. But the fact remains, that plums originally came from sloes, apples from crab, and the most exquisite pelargoniums from "Stinking Cranesbill." These horses—or ponies, if you will—have good, though unregistered and unrecorded, ancestry; they can be well utilized for stud purposes, they are new blood, can be bought for a mere trifle, and there is no fabulous outlay, nor a really fabulous pedigree, to be encountered, as in the case of Arabs. Here is, for dealers, and "limited" companies directed by retired officers, a "potentiality of wealth beyond the dreams of avarice." The Russian Government are not remiss in utilizing this treasure; nor need our own Government, if we had one, be so either. As for private individuals—verbum sap.

It is reported from St. Petersburg, says the Iron and Coal Trades Review, that the scarcity of coal there is so great that most manufactories will be compelled to cease operations unless stocks can be replenished within a fortnight. There is, it seems, an abundance of coal in the interior provinces, but on account of the heavy expenses of carriage it is too dear to be employed at the capital. It costs in St. Petersburg just double the price of English coal. Many manufacturers have commenced to lay in large stocks of wood, but speculators are greatly disposed to profit by the occasion and increase their prices. It appears certain, therefore, that a great many manufactories will be obliged to close altogether if war breaks out. Nevertheless, the Russian Government has ordered the Petersburg-Moscow Railway Company to increase their rates charges of upon English coal, from 1·2 copecks per pound per verst to 1·8 copecks, while the rate upon home coal is to remain unaltered.

"IRON" informs us that the Chinese Government, casting aside national prejudice, are on the point of working the coal mines of China in a more systematic manner than has hitherto been done, calling in the aid of European miners. They recently applied to the Société Cockerill, Belgium, for a contingent of experienced miners to superintend the extensive collieries which they propose to open up in certain of the rich deposits already prospected. Very liberal salaries were offered, and it is said that the appointments were eagerly accepted. Thirty miners were engaged, and they are likely to be followed by another thirty, who will proceed to China on the chance of obtaining an engagement on their arrival. As the Government will probably be glad to avail themselves of European aid, there is hardly a doubt that the latter will speedily obtain the appointments they desire. It is also probable that the Chinese will obtain the necessary plant to work their mines properly. But they will soon learn the proper methods of working, and in opening up other mines they will adopt the system they have learned, dispensing in the future with the aid of Europeans. The Chinese, like the Japanese, learn things readily, and then conduct matters themselves. There are large deposits of coal in China, and, with the assistance now obtained, they will very quickly be developed, so as to be of more importance than heretofore.

It has long been known that French Engineers, at the head of whom most worthily stands Sir F. de Lesseps, G.C.S.I., have seriously contemplated the restoration to Father Neptune of his long-lost dominion in Northern Africa, by forming a navigable channel to the Sahara, and thus filling with water the basin which was undoubtedly its receptacle in bygone ages. The project seems feasible enough in theory; yet, even in these days of gigantic engineering projects, it almost takes away one's breath to hear of a lake fifteen times the size of the Lake of Geneva. Those who know the length of that lake, say from near Martigny to Geneva, and its breadth south of Lausanne or Vevey, and will try to bring before the mental optic the idea what fifteen times those distances would amount to, may well be staggered. To Italy the construction of such a work would be the greatest of boons. It would, in all probability, for ever end the enervating and unhealthy Siroccos which blows directly from the burning desert, lessening but little of its heat in overleaping the Mediterranean, and, like our own wind in the East, is good neither for man nor beast. The effects on the climate of Africa of carrying out this magnificent conception are at best matters of conjecture; but the following details of a strictly practical character may interest our readers:—

A party of French engineers and hydrographers have left for Tunis, charged with making the necessary studies on the spot, for the construction of the harbour in the Bay of Gabes, at the mouth of the Oued Mellah, in connection with the canal which is to establish navigable communication between the Mediterranean and the Chotts. It will be remembered that, in the early spring of 1883, M. de Lesseps made a trip to those great marsh lakes in Southern Tunis which it is the intention to convert into a vast inland sea, with a view of testing the results of the late Colonel Roudaire's survey, and that he came back convinced that the scheme was practicable. The expedition which has now started will also make investigations as to the feasibility of sinking artesian wells along the route, and a survey for a railway which it might hereafter be thought necessary to construct. The head of the expedition is Commandant Landas, professor of topography at the school of Saint Cyr. He is accompanied by M. Baronet, who assisted Colonel Roudaire in making the preliminary surveys, and several other engineers. It may be advisable to recall to mind the chief features of the report on the undertaking which M. de Lesseps published after his return from Tunis in 1883. It states that the estuary of the Oued Mellah, which is to be the beginning of the canal leading to the Chotts to be inundated, offers a part, covered at high water, of sufficient breadth, which might easily be excavated, and would form a port sheltered by nature from all the winds from north-east to south passing by the west. The winds from north-east to south passing by the east would not be dangerous to the breakwaters. The roads in front of the entrance are, moreover, in exactly the same situation as those of Gabes. The navigation in the canal, according to the report, would offer no difficulty, as the canal would form almost a straight line. The calcareous rocks found by Colonel Roudaire's soundings in 1879 at the base of the Gabes bar, but of comparatively unimportant extent, are an advantage rather than an inconvenience at the mouth of the canal. They will furnish the requisite material for the construction of the pier and port buildings. M. de Lesseps thinks that, considering the nature of the soil traversed, it will be sufficient to cut, in the alluvial part a canal, on the average 80 to 100 feet wide, which will be further widened by the action of the current. This cutting could be executed in the maximum period of five years, at an estimated cost of £6,000,000. The proposed inland sea would be fifteen times as large as the Lake of Geneva. It has an elevation much lower than the level of the Mediterranean, the depression being in some places as low as 165 feet below that level.

At the annual meeting of the East India Association, on the 20th inst., under the chairmanship of Sir R. Temple, who was re-elected President, it was stated that many of the suggestions of the Association, and the principles advocated by them had commended themselves to, and had been adopted by, the governing authorities, and a strong Council was nominated for the ensuing year, with Sir Orfeur Cavenagh as Chairman.

In our last issue we referred to the very loyal proffers of troops which have been made, and continue to be made, by Native States. Among offers recently made few are more cordially to be welcomed than that of Nepal. At Khatmandoo they have actually held a review "of the army preparing for active service in Afghanistan." Nearly 14,000 troops were present, and seem, according to the authority quoted by the Times' Calcutta correspondent, to have shown up well: all the words of command being given in English. No higher compliment could be paid us; and English regiments, who have fought shoulder to shoulder with the gallant Goorkhas, will appreciate its value in action.

NOR are the ladies behind. Their hearts are, we are sure, in the right place; whether their tender persons are so in battle is a question to which history has given an unpleasantly dubious reply. The Dowager Maharani Juma Bai of Baroda, in writing to Lord Dufferin to offer the services of a corps of Amazons, thus pertinently expresses herself:—

The fighting capabilities and horsemanship of the Maharattees ladies can be no secret to your Excellency, and I hope that the offer which I make, and which I am prepared to carry out at the shortest notice, will be accepted, and that it will prove a precedent to the ladies of India and of England, and show the prowess with which the race of females is capable of bearing arms, and that we can fight side by side with the military forces of the Empire.

"Too late" has been the Britisher's motto for some time past. We hope it is not "too late" to recover our influence in Turkey, where the Sultan seems very cordially to have received Sir W. White, who has "ad interim" credentials to the "Unspeakable Turk." Once more we ask, why no pukka ambassador? In the same way we have (for five years) left Gilghit unblest by the presence of a British Agent; also Kashgar. Now, we are not going to be rude enough to insinuate that either Gilghit or Kashgar are as important to English interests as Istanbul; but they are all objects of Russian aggression, all objects to which British attention should be directed. In one sense Kashgar is, perhaps, the safest of the three, as the Chinese Government are concerned in its being kept out of Russian hands; and it may safely be asserted—have they not thoroughly thrashed the French, to whom we have kotowed throughout?—that their interests will be far and away better safe-guarded than are ours under the present régime.

THE Afghan Blue-book is, indeed, dismal reading for anyone who values the honour of his country. We take the subjoined from an Edinburgh paper. Fancy the constituents of the right hon. member for Midlothian writing:—

What comes out clearly is that the Russian attack at Penjdeh was deliberately planned beforehand; that it was undertaken in the teeth of express engagements, and in absolute defiance of everything said by Lord Granville. That the rupture did not take place sooner was solely owing to the firmness of Sir Peter Lumsden. The sequel to the story is, that General Komaroff, the Russian commander, responsible for disregarding the Russian instructions, is rewarded with a sword of honour, while Sir Peter Lumsden, who seems to have had a higher sense of duty than his superiors, is recalled in disgrace. To call this a shameful British surrender is to use excessively mild language. Yet it is only one of many. The Russians have had their own way in everything.

As to the deliberateness of the attack on Penjdeh we expressed ourselves in almost the same language a fortnight back. It needed but little intuition—just a little more than Mr. Gladstone has—ce qui ne vent pas beaucoup dire.

It has long been known that negotiations of importance have been on foot between Germany and Burmah. We know how Burmah overlaps—if one may use the phrase—parts of British Burmah, and of what vital importance it is to us that no foreign power should, treaty wise or otherwise, get a footing in that quarter. From the western side access is obtainable to Burmah only through British territory; from the south, the many rivers which, as we observed the other day, form a natural line of communication between South-Western China and the ocean, also afford ready fluvial access to Burmah. It is not a little significant that while the French have been trying to “tap” South-Western China, and, through it, Burmah from the Tonquin side, the Germans should have concluded a direct treaty (ostensibly commercial, but possibly enough with secret articles) with the latter State. The colonial relations of France and Germany with foreign—especially semi-civilised—States, and the manner in which such relations have of late always been carefully dovetailed so as to emphasise the decadence of England, form a topic too wide and too important to be casually treated. Mr. Cross, the Under-Secretary for India, was, properly enough, questioned last Thursday concerning this Burmo-Teutonic treaty, and, as properly, knew (in his official capacity, we presume—is Mr. Cross ever allowed to know anything of the Department which he is facetiously supposed to “represent” in the House of Commons?) nothing about it. Yet the Times can reprint it in extenso. A quid bon the present Ambassador in Berlin? or have, in the present “Ministerial crisis,” the Foreign Office and the India Office come to blows, and won’t intercommunicate?

WE hail, as an augury of better things in the most important Native State in India, and the one which, in 1857, did more than any other to support our Raj, the appointment of Mr. Dunlop, late of the Berar Commission, and until recently in the service of the Nawab Ikbal-ud-Dowla, to be Inspector-General of Revenue in Hyderabad. “This is the first time,” says the Bombay Gazette, “that such a high appointment has been conferred on a European. Mr. Dunlop is an officer of considerable revenue experience, and has made his mark in the Berars. His appointment will therefore be very popular with all classes.” Nominations of men of proved capacity, however excellent in themselves, need, nevertheless, to be supplemented by one condition—the men must be supported. If the nominees be but allowed to act independently, peculation would be checked to an extent which would bring lakhs on lakhs into the State coffers. Nor does this remark (as anyone conversant with the administration—or want of it—which prevails in many Native States, knows) apply by any means to Hyderabad alone.

THE Native papers are, as might in the circumstances be expected, chiefly occupied with the prospects of war, and present, in other respects, but little of general interest. The following are, perhaps, those best worth noting:—

The Sadharani says:—The attitude of the Czar has always been suspicious. He says that peace is desirable, but he has refused the proposal of an amicable settlement made to him. Therefore it is clear that his wish for peace is a mere pretext. Neither the Russians nor the English will give in, so there is no likelihood of the dispute being settled until one party is defeated.

THE Nababibhakar remarks:—If both parties be not desirous of peace than it is useless to expect it. Let both English and Russians assume a peaceful attitude. For the battle of Penjdeh both parties were to blame. Without the advice of the British Commissioners and encouragement from Lord Dufferin, the Afghans would not have ventured to quarrel with the Russians for such trifling reasons. We have no concern with the difficulties of the Russians. The misfortunes of the English are our own misfortunes. Therefore we earnestly beseech for peace.

THE Shamaya observes:—The people of India desire that, if a war between England and Russia breaks out, it may be waged in some other place than in India. The country in which a war breaks out suffers a good deal. Besides, there are other disadvantages if Russia be allowed to advance towards India. We earnestly pray that by the grace of God the war may be averted. But if war must be, let it take place in another country, and not in India.

The tone of Reis and Reyjet is much less encouraging, as regards the sympathy of Natives with ourselves, than the utterances of some of the Native journals. It certainly has the courage of its opinions.

That (the) natives of India are, to a man, prepared to stand by the English and to fight for them and themselves, is news to us, at any rate. To deliberately endeavour to lead the British to depend for the maintenance of the Empire, in any appreciable measure, on the bravery of the Baboos and the alacrity of editors and correspondents of the native Press, is the best possible service that could be done to the Russian cause. The Lord save the Government from such loyal citizens and wild advisers! The British would be wise in receiving their averments with a good quantity of salt. The statement that the Natives are prepared to a man to fight for England can scarcely be true. There must be large deductions made, we fear, before it could come near the mark. That it is not absolutely correct we can undertake to maintain, provided we are allowed to have a locus standi in the matter. Regarding ourselves as of the nation, we confess we are not prepared for the unselfish heroism.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

AMONGST THE SHANS.*

In the expanse of land which lies between Burma and China is a region inhabited by people "who shave their hair and tattoo their body;" they are light and changeable, weak and idle. The country they inhabit is full of impenetrable jungles, filled with serpents and tigers. The rains are continuous, and the heat of "summer causes mortal illnesses." This far from prepossessing description of the Shans and the land they inhabit, written, it may be added, 130 years before the Christian era, does not altogether hold good in the present day, at least if we take Mr. Colquhoun as our "counsellor and friend." That enterprising traveller, on the contrary, proclaims that Indo-China is "veritably the gold field of Asia"—gold is exported, taxes are paid in gold, pagodas are covered with gold—it is gold et præterea nihil: thus far the land—the people are described as civilized, polite, courteous, and moral. In 1879, owing to certain disputes between British foresters and the owners of the teak domains at Zimmé, in Siam, it was determined by the Government of India to send a mission to the king of that country, in order to make arrangements for the meeting of a joint commission which should settle all pending cases, and draw out such rules for the working of the forests as would be likely to prevent any future clashing between the rival interests." Mr. Colquhoun formed one of the party.

Starting from Bangkok in the Gulf of Siam, they passed through the land of the Karens, one of the principal fields of the American Mission, which latter can boast that there are no less than 457 parishes scattered about the country, peopled by Christian converts, who not only support their own parties and their own schools, but contribute liberally towards the furtherance of Missionary work amongst other hill tribes living beyond the British border—a marked contrast to their heathen brethren, whose source of inspiration is the "Poongyee," or priest; not a very astounding state of affairs, since "they drink, gamble, and flirt in a most shameless manner," is the description of the fraternity of those who have Buddha for their Lord.

After quitting Karennee, panorama after panorama of magnificent pine forests refreshed the eye, and invigorated the nerves, till in due course the travellers reached the regions inhabited by Shans; but a dilemma of an utterly unexpected nature awaited solution. It chanced that the members of the mission one evening went to a neighbouring stream to bathe; their movements and capers in the water became in a few moments a source of delight and astonishment to the natives, who flocked in numbers to the river bank to watch the "whites" disport themselves in the refreshing element. But horribile dictu, the villagers thus attracted were mostly of the feminine gender, and did not display the least sense of modesty on finding the new comers making for the bank—far otherwise, they viewed, with shrieks of laughter, all the manoeuvres of the bathers to induce their somewhat "rapid" audience to retire for awhile. Those native ladies may, for ought that is told us in Mr. Colquhoun's work, be still standing on the edge of the river, for they never budged, and the blushing Englishmen had to put their modesty in their pocket and emerge from the water in the full gaze of their unabashed admirers—thus much for custom. This danger surmounted, the Mission fell into the hands of a still more unabashed priest, who paid them every attention while inspecting his monastery, but heaped piles of abuse upon their devoted heads when they refused to pay him for his urbanity. Once again fortune was fickle, for emerging from the clutches of the infuriated "poongyee," they alighted upon some ladies still more inquisitive than their sisters of river-bank notoriety; this time finding the hands and the faces of the Europeans to be white, the inquisitive feminines, inspired with a laudable thirst for knowledge, insisted upon ascertaining for themselves whether the visitors were white all over: this danger was avoided owing to the absolute refusal of the "pale faces" to be thus inspected. It will not occasion surprise to read after these adventures that a bazaar is epigrammatically described as "a mile and a half of nudity."

At length, however, all troubles alike, male and female, were at an end, and the Mission entered safe and sound at Zimmé as we call it, but "Jama-pada-pur-there-nagara-nawara-raza," as the natives term it! They were welcomed by a little dapper wizened old gentleman, the Resident Commissioner of the King of Siam, an individual who had been in Europe, and with a result that he never ceased proclaiming, "too much plenty work in London, plenty pleasure Paris." The town is fortified and of considerable extent, containing upwards of 900 or 1,000 houses—like all Oriental cities, their bazaar is a prominent feature—but what particularly struck the travellers, and need it be added, greatly pleased them after the experiences on the road, was, that the women were so fair that they could blush; but admiration did not go much further, for a cosmetic composed of the fat of the unclean animal imparted anything but an agreeable aroma to the fair charmers of Zimmé, and in verity and truth—"distance lent enchantment to the view."

In this country "Bill Sykes" is pampered and cared for to a degree that must frequently occasion that worthy individual to put his tongue in his cheek with surprise and delight, but, amongst the Shans, prisoners are allowed to roam about the town in chains entirely dependent upon the charity of the stall holders in the market for their daily food, a method which might with advantage be introduced into our own land in some cases of recent notoriety.

Zimmé is a nest of poongyees, who number no less than 500, while there are upwards of seventy-five monasteries in the town: in Burma these worthies parade the town with a pot in which the "faithful" pour their offerings as the fraternity pass along—these worthy venerables being objects of the greatest deference, all people, whatever their social position, giving way before them; but amongst the Shans matters are far otherwise, and the priests may be seen at all hours and in every direction loitering about idly, mixing with the people, sitting in the bazaar, conversing with women, even entering private houses at night, riding elephants, eating after the sun has passed the meridian, devouring flesh, selling what is given for use in the monasteries, and bowing to the chief and his wife—in a word, doing everything their religion forbids them to do. They are supposed to supply the educational wants of the people, but as a matter of fact they do nothing of the kind; as teachers they merely inculcate, by example, habits of apathy, laziness, and downright vice: of course there are good and bad "poongyees," but the latter, it is said, predominate in the proportion of at least 2 to 1. In spite, however, of the apparently favourable nature of the "religious soil," the experience of our Protestant and Catholic missionaries is, that converts are rare; the few who cast off the dust of their feet at the religion of their youth, are but as goats amongst the sheep, jumping in and out of the fold as it suits their inclination or their interest. In this respect they seem, unlike their neighbours in Anam, who readily adopt any new faith placed before them, the result is at once obvious and suggestive. "They are obstinate, vindictive, dissemblers, liars, and thieves—slow to get into a passion, but terrible when they do." Perhaps all this, however, arises from the circumstance that "rotten fish and dogs flesh are their favourite diet."

The curse of the country is slavery, a canker which saps the manhood out of the people, encourages them to indolence, prevents them from enriching themselves, keeps them backward in civilization, and poor in spirit. The masters it enervates, and makes them lose all zest for vigorous action, as unfit to rule others as to control themselves. "He that loves pleasure, mu t from pleasure fall," is written in indelible letters across the annals of the nation. The King of Siam, a most enlightened potentate, has set his heart upon the regeneration and advancement of his kingdom, and has already made great strides in that direction; but it is difficult to fight against the prejudices of thousands of years, and to persuade a people to abandon habits hallowed by the traditions of countless generations; so it will not occasion surprise that much remains to be done before Siam can be ranked as a civilized power.

Such is in the briefest outline, this country, with an area of 260,000 square miles, and a population estimated at about 40,000,000 souls, which Mr. Colquhoun is anxious should be opened out by means of a railway to Zimmé at a cost of about two and a-half millions of money. It is urged with plausibility that the enterprise of this nation would not only enable us to re-stock our lands in Burma with cattle, thinned as they have of late been owing to the ravages of the cattle-plague, but would afford a new mart for English goods and manufactures, and last, but not least, enable the king to cope with the slavery in his dominions. To quote Mr. Colquhoun's language: "With the sound of the railway whistle feudal oppression will disappear for ever." There certainly does seem a large and fertile field for English enterprise; and it may be hoped that the publication of this very interesting and valuable work will open the eyes of the powers that be, alike political and commercial, to the desirability of taking some steps to secure a prize, destined to fall to the lot of the most pushing and enthusiastic of the western nations whose instincts lead them to find pastures new in the domains of commerce and trade.

SHALL ENGLAND KEEP INDIA?*

Shall England keep India? The question is momentous at any time, but especially is this the case when "surrender" is the order of the day. When, too, the dream of a Stoletoff is giving place to the brutal reality of a Komaroff. Mr. Ashmead Bartlett's volume is, therefore, welcome; none the less so, because it is written by an avowed enthusiast; it is precisely because there are so few people who take the trouble to inform themselves as to the circumstances of the day—so far, that is, as foreign politics are concerned—that so much apathy exists in all that concerns the might and honour of our nation. A thousandfold better would it be were there more enthusiasts. Russia would not then be able to trade upon England's indifference. Governments would no longer find it their interest to study the politics of the hustings rather than the welfare of the country. There would be a united front in repelling aggression, and the glorious traditions of the past would give place to still more glorious traditions in the future. But for our sins things are otherwise.

So far as the argumentative portion of Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett's pamphlet is concerned, three "elementary facts" are the basis of the entire fabric. 1. That Russia means to have India if, and whenever, she can get it. 2. That India can only be safeguarded by British bayonets, backed up and directed by a vigilant and resolute statesmanship. 3. That the further the Russian frontier is kept from the Indus the more secure will our Indian Empire be, and the less troublesome and dangerous will be the political pressure that the Russian Government can and will, from this time forth, exert upon England.

The reflections to which these dicta give rise are far from reassuring. If in the future we can only hold England by a display of "vigilant and resolute statesmanship"—qualities, alas, now unknown in the British Empire—it may be feared that the day when the Czar of All the Russias will sit on the musnud at Calcutta vice the British Governor-General deposed, is within a measurable distance.

The means of defence against a calamity which would shake to its basis the future of England's Imperial power is, according to Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett's theory, to hasten a railway to Kandahar and Herat, the former town being put in a complete state of defence and garrisoned by British or Indian troops; but the safety of India must not be confided to the keeping of the Ameer of Afghanistan. As regards Herat, the fear is that "too late" has already been written across the portals of a city rendered memorable by the ever-memorable defence of Eldred Pottinger. That something must be done is admitted on all hands—but what? "Masterly inactivity" has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. What is to step into its place? The advocates of the forward school of policy have, at least, one strong argument in their favour. Battles round Herat and Kandahar could be lost and won without fatal effects within the "red line;" but one disaster on the banks of the Indus would lay all the plains of sunny Hindustan at the feet of the Russian hordes, and the beneficent sway of our Empire would have to make room for the savage barbarism of Holy Russia. Can such a result be contemplated with calm indifference? Upon the answer depends the future of our land. The corollary of "perish India" is "perish England."

PERSIAN FOR TRAVELLERS.*

Mr. Finn, H.B.M.'s Consul at Resht, has long been known as one of the foremost Persian scholars who reflect credit upon the nation to which he belongs. In these circumstances a manual from his pen for travellers in the land of Iran must be a welcome addition to the storehouse of learning. Nor will the work disappoint the expectations formed of it consequent on the high, and deservedly so, reputation which attaches to its author. It would be a misuse of language to term the little "brochure" erudite; indeed were it so, it would fail in the object with which it was published—designed to afford travellers assistance in making known their wants in a strange land and still stranger tongue, it is obvious that learned scholarship would be out of place. Mr. Finn has, we venture to think, wisely abandoned all efforts to be "classical" in what he has prepared, with a result that "he who runs may read." The first part of the work is composed of a slight sketch of Persian grammar, of a sufficiently comprehensive nature to afford a traveller some insight into the "whys and wherefores" of the speech he hears around him on all sides; while the remainder of the pages are filled with a list of ordinary words in daily use at every turn. The transliteration into the Persian character follows the phonetic system, so that the reader may be enabled to pronounce what he sees before him. This method is much to be commended, and the only fault that can be imputed is that owing, we presume, to the want of Mr. Finn's personal supervision of the proof sheets, not a few errors have crept into an otherwise model compilation. But we are far from casting a slur on a work which is welcome with all its faults, for "errare est humanum," true at all times, is seldom more strikingly verified than when Oriental and English type are commingled. The fickle goddess Fortune seems always to sit like a malignant imp at the elbow of the printer's devil in such cases. Congratulating Mr. Finn upon his successful efforts in the task of drawing East and West into closer union, we commend his book to all who may need its assistance when travelling in a country destined not improbably to play no inconsiderable part in the annals of the nineteenth century.

INDIAN VOLUNTEERING.

THE last Indian news informs us that the Government of India "has under consideration the question of making provision for a larger employment in the army of Natives of good position." We need not further urge the opinion, so often advocated, that nothing better than this could be done, except to carry it out.

But the "under consideration" rather gives a cold-waterish feeling; as if, after all, nothing would be done. From a Government of chatter and pendulum—backwards and forwards—action, like that which we have the misfortune to endure here, of course this would, as the old women say, "come quite nateral;" but from Lord Dufferin we hope better things. The fact is—and it cannot too soon be realised—that, in days when we live at railroad speed, "consideration" may be carried too far. We have the highest respect for the old system of governing by reams of foolscap. It was excellent. But, excellent in its time. Truth—we don't mean the paper so miscalled—is also excellent. But, as the old lady of the stage said to her daughter, "Truth is always to be adhered to, when it is convenient to be told." So with the verbose minutes, indited in private by each member of an Indian Government, but facetiously called "consultations." They were, in their time—when India and England were six months apart—most excellent. We take it that nothing finer of its kind exists than Warren Hastings' minute-writing; nothing in which the arguments are more cogent, nor in which one who argues on the other side feels himself more completely in a vice. "Nothing," said Francis (and Junius, too, knew how to write Saxon), "can stand against the Governor-General's pen." But everything in its place. When Hastings, on his arraignment by the House of Commons, read the House one of such minutes as a statement of his defence, the members, after a good stare at the illustrious stranger, "left him to tell his story to the clerks and the Serjeant-at-Arms." It was out of place. And we think that the long State-papers of the Indian Government are so too.

But to come to our more immediate subject. Those of our readers who have access to the Indian papers will have seen how strongly the desire has been expressed by Native gentlemen to form a volunteer corps, or to join one of those already existing; to become, therefore, in the majority of instances, what so many Britons of birth and standing have become, "full privates." Did this occur in ordinary times, when a casual or ill-natured observer might attribute the movement to a mere instinct of imitation, it might pass without much notice. But at the present hour, when the spirit of Imperialism, aroused by the patriotic proceedings of the late Government, and which even the dastardly conduct of the present Cabinet has been unable to quench, has so markedly shown itself, when the Colonies have sent their hundreds, and are willing to send their thousands, of troops to aid in supporting Imperial power, we cannot but hail this tendency in India, in which country Imperial dignity will undoubtedly first be assailed, with the very warmest welcome. That policy is assuredly the wisest which, in whatever way, most closely knits together the component parts of an Empire. Now one of the weak points, perhaps one of the weakest points, of our Indian administration, has always been our persistent failure practically to recognise the fact, that among our Indian fellow-subjects there is an average—in real fact more than an average—desire for military distinction. We say that this desire has not been practically recognised. It has been theoretically, that is, on paper, recognised by all our foremost Indian Statesmen; but Governors General have not always been Statesmen, nor has the Board of Control, Heaven save the mark! or the India Office, often beheld the face of a statesman.

Volunteering, indeed, bids fair to become quite "form" in the whole Peninsula. The not usually bellicose Bengalee, the sturdy Madrassee, the Bombay Parsee, sprung from a stock which only wants proper training to produce as fine soldiers as any race in existence, the hereditarily warlike Rohilla and Punjabee, have all shown their appreciation of the Government under which they live by expressing, in the most practical of ways, their earnest desire to support it. We can call to mind nothing approaching this unanimity since the time when our own volunteer movement took its origin as a national response to the insulting threats of the French colonels. Perhaps, hardly even then, for we are a homogeneous nation; while in India we have races of the most varied tongues, habits, and inclinations, vying with each other to do yeoman's service to their common Suzerain. We should think it a great national misfortune were this loyal feeling quenched by insistence on legal quibbles, as hinted in the Calcutta correspondence of yesterday's Times.

We put aside, as chimerical, the fears which journals or individuals, inimical to British interests, may express, that in thus arming the native gentry we are giving cohesion to a possible hostile movement in case of invasion. True that, in days when a man can learn in three months to pick off a sentry at a mile's distance (as was repeatedly done—with Chassepots—by the French, during the Franco-German war in 1870-1), and when loose skirmishing order is the rule for light troops, volunteers might be privately trained, and do us immense mischief. Is the mischief likely to be greater, or less, if we train the men ourselves, accustom them to act under the orders of (carefully chosen) officers, and utilise their enthusiasm? The saying of "new wine into old bottles" seems singularly applicable. Don't let your wine, your military ardour, effervesce where it will do harm, but put it where it can be safely kept until required.

And, above all, let our native friends feel that we are trusting them, and do trust them. We believe that we have ruled India, if not always with wisdom, at all events with a sincere desire to act for the best. We are conscientiously of opinion that India would never be as well off under any other Government. If this be not so, we should be ready to join in the cry, "Perish India!" so far as Britain is concerned. The sooner, in such a case, that we follow, in India as elsewhere, the scuttle and stampede "policy" of the present travesty of an English Government, the better.

[At the last moment, as we are going to press, comes the following from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times:—If we enlist the sympathies of the ruling families by enrolling their "scions," as officers in Native volunteer regiment, much would be gained. Nothing is more remarkable than the almost superstitious respect entertained by Natives for the old families who have so long ruled them; and the all but-matter-of-course manner in which they follow their lead. "I hear on good authority that the Government has submitted for Lord Kimberley's sanction a proposal to raise a Native regiment, to be wholly officered by Native chiefs, noblemen, and scions of Royal or noble families. If the experiment succeed other similar corps may be organised."]

Chit Chat.

THE Press in India is still "at" the Russian organ in this country. Listen to the language of the Pioneer: "This is the third time that the new management of the Pall Mall Gazette, in its frantic efforts for originality, has grievously offended the British public. First by mimicking a child's funeral procession in the street for purposes of advertisement; secondly, by flooding its pages 'for the public good' with various details of immorality; and, thirdly, by advocating the cause of England's enemies. If three such offences do not suffice to wreck the fortunes of any newspaper, which still professes to find its circulation among English ladies and gentlemen, all newspapers should be immortal." Yet the advocate of the "cause of England's enemies" still keeps open shop, but whether with diminished trade who can tell?

A CHARMING tale comes from Bengal. There was a Zenana mission in a certain holy city peopled by Brahmins, none of whom would allow their daughters to go to school. One day it chanced that a wealthy suitor of high caste arrived in search of a wife of education. He failed—there were plenty of "caste" ladies, but not one could read or write—disgusted he quitted the holy city a free and independent bachelor. Next week thirty-two young ladies enrolled their names on the mission school list. Here is a hint for the Board School Committees of this country.

INDIAN furlough pay seems likely to become a burning question. The circumstances are these: In 1868 the regulations were issued declaring that "thenceforth and for ever in all future orders and references the term furlough pay was to be understood as the half salary converted at the exchange of two shillings for the rupee." In the teeth of this "sacred covenant" Government insist upon paying according to the official rate of exchange of the day. This seems hard, and it can scarcely be cause for astonishment that the officers kick.

LAST summer a strange missive came from Thibet into the possession of the British authorities in Assam; it had braved the dangers of plains 500 miles in extent, where grain will not ripen owing to the cold; it had journeyed along plains where to breathe is difficult and to travel perilous; it had escaped all risks of theft, loss, and destruction, and, romantic in its history, it remains a marvel of the hour, for not a soul throughout the length and breadth of the land can interpret its meaning. History has repeated itself—only this time no Daniel is forthcoming.

QUETTA, in place of listening to the tread of troops, has been indulging in the luxury of a fancy dress dance—but for the life of them people cannot settle what are to be their dresses on the occasion—fair ones, with anxious faces and weary steps, wander alone in hopeless despair trying to catch an idea, or pick up a hint anent the ball of the season, while men are bewildered and testy; in short, society is thoroughly unhinged. Yet this is pleasure.

THEY do things in the good old-fashioned way in Shikarpur, in Sind; thieves, when convicted, are mounted bare-headed on donkeys with their faces turned towards the animal's cropped tails, while drummers follow in the rear to explain to an admiring audience the crime of the culprit. This on the top of flogging is rather severe, but, doubtless, effective. The whole scene is eminently Oriental.

FRATERNITY, equality, and liberty—these are the watchwords of the French Republic; but how do they put the theory into practice? "The French Government has recently expelled three Irishmen, sixteen Germans, two Italians, a Pole, and a Russian." The fraternity is obvious—a fraternity of suffering; equality—clearly since all nations are treated alike; liberty—quite so—to go where they like.

THE Straits born Chinese of Singapore have established a Lawn Tennis Club at that capital. One drawback is serious; their feet are too small and cramped to enable the fair players to run. Yet the rules of the game, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, change not—which will win—the game or the ladies?

AN American has discovered that it is not the drinks that ruin a man, but the drinking between the drinks. Rather smart.

THE King of Burma contemplates, it is said, introducing a Constitutional Government into his dominions. "There is," says the Times of India, "to be a House of Representatives, and we suppose all the necessary electoral machinery. No mention is made of a Caucus, but this surely will not be forgotten. Perhaps Mr. Schnadhorst might be induced, for a consideration, to visit Mandalay for the purpose of instructing the simple-minded Burmese in the arts which he practices with such effect at his headquarters at Birmingham." This and much more in the same strain, none too complimentary to the tactics of the Liberal party, serve to show that our good friend Schnadhorst's labours have not been in vain.

"Good wine needs no bush," a remark which applies to poetry. Here is a rare, quaint, jovial song:—

St. Paul was once a rare M.D.,
He gave advice to Timothy,
"Thy stomach weak to keep from aching,
Use only wine thy thirst when slaking."
He is the man to suit us all,
Hurrah for doctors like St. Paul.

Is it a criminal offence for a Mahomedan to say Amen in a mosque after the conclusion of a prayer? Some sects say yes; others say no. Yet a man was recently convicted for uttering this pious ejaculation in a house of worship. Peculiarities are not confined to Church of England Protestantism.

KNOWLEDGE of geography does not seem great on the editorial staff of the Graphic. A non-commissioned officer of the camp of Sir Peter Lumsden had been in the habit of sending sketches to the newspaper in question, which latter thereupon asked him to supply them with a drawing of the meeting between the Viceroy and the Ameer of Afghanistan at Rawul Pindi, upwards of a thousand miles distant from the locality where the embarrassed man of the pencil happened to be stationed!

A GOOD story is going the rounds à propos of the way they do things at Calicut. A native, as a source of amusement, got intoxicated, and when in that condition, "by way of a little pleasant excitement, tied up a poor little girl, burned her with red-hot flat-irons, kicked her to death, and then threw her body into the jungle." "I thought you were hung?" was the natural exclamation of a bewildered passer-by, who some time after the occurrence of the above escapade met our sober friend walking about as if nothing had happened. "I plenty sure of that, too," was the naive explanation; "only judge gentleman so kind and vakeel so clever, so I coming back all right." Strange to add, "he frankly admitted having killed the child." In England questions would be asked in the House on the subject.

AT the last meeting of the Institution of Civil Engineers the following gentlemen connected with India were admitted as members:—G. A. Anley, P.W.D., India; Morris Birkbeck, P.W.D., British Burma; J. T. Simpson, Govt. C. E. College, Calcutta; and F. H. Trevithick, Madras Railway. The following were chosen Associate Members:—F. W. Maunsell, P.W.D., India; and H. H. Roden, P.W.D., India.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, May 15th; Madras and Allahabad, May 13th; Calcutta, May 13th.

PEOPLE talk of the unhealthiness of Indian service. Here has gallant old Hope Dick passed away at the age of ninety-three, and he is only "one of the oldest officers" of the Indian Army. Entering the Bengal Infantry in 1808, he was engaged in Rewah in 1813, in the Mahratta and Pindaree war of 1817-18, and only got his company in 1823. He commanded his regiment (the 56th Bengal Native Infantry) at Maharajpore in 1843. Passing through the usual steps he was a "full General" having held that rank since 1875) at the time of his death, which occurred at Cheltenham on the 24th ult.

THE Rev. W. F. Armstrong, long chaplain at Rawal Pindi, writes to a contemporary to solicit help for a Temperance Hall at that station, to which the Government of India have promised £600, to be met by an equal amount in private subscriptions. Mr. Armstrong, who writes from Staines Vicarage, says that a third of the soldiery were "total abstinents." Those of our readers who believe in the advantages of total abstinence (miscalled "temperance," which all respectable members of society practice) may be glad of the opportunity of assisting Mr. Armstrong. At all events, it is right that they should have it.

THE following suggestion, to investigate the nature of cholera by experiment in corpore vili of felons condemned to death, has the approval of the Madras Mail. In an experiment of the kind it is perhaps as well that M.M. les assassins commencent. It is proposed by Dr. Cornish, well-known for his investigations into the subject, that, as between 300 and 400 persons are every year judicially sentenced to death in the Indian empire and its dependencies, a number of these, say one-tenth, be made—with their own full knowledge and consent—subjects of experiments as to the spread of cholera; on condition that if they escape the experiments, their lives be spared. An international commission of experts might be appointed to determine upon the experimental tests needed to ascertain if cholera is or is not a disease capable of being communicated from person to person. This would do more in the space of a few months to help forward the inquiry into the nature of cholera than has been accomplished by indirect observation during the last century. It seems to us that if the principle underlying this proposed test were admitted, it might and would be extended to other most important experiments, such as the various causes and cure of cholera; the cure for snake-bites, hydrophobia and the like.

THE Marquis of Ripon is, it seems, not only to be made a Duke, but which will be news to some of us, he is a "Nabab."

THE following from a daily French newspaper will show how entirely that nation is acquainted with all the intricacies of our English peerage:—"Yesterday, at the church of St. Martin, in the environs of London, took place the marriage of Mme. Gladys, Duchess Dowager of Londesal, to Milor Robinson, Count de Grey. The bride belongs to the highest and most ancient nobility of England, and is sister of the Count of Pembroke-Wilton. The bridegroom, on the contrary, is the elder son of that Marquess de Ripoy who was the first of the Nababs to be ennobled by Her Britannic Majesty."

SIR SAMUEL BAKER, who is on a shooting excursion in India, writes that he has obtained plenty of exciting sport. One day's bag consisted of three tigers and five panthers.

THE subjoined extract from the Englishman is too good not to bear repetition:—

A native gentleman in the Madras Presidency, who is also said to be a large landholder, but who unfortunately is unacquainted with English, deserves the credit of having invented an entirely new reason for the war between England and Russia. According to this keen observer, the greatest wish of the Russian Emperor is to prevent the British Throne devolving upon the Prince of Wales on the death of the Queen, as the Emperor's daughter is married to Her Majesty's second son, the Duke of Edinburgh. In order to forward the interests of his son-in-law, the object of the Emperor is to obtain possession of India from England, and to make his son-in-law the ruler of the Indian Empire, for which purpose he would not hesitate to enter into a war with the British nation.

WE commend the resolutions arrived at by Prince Don-doukoff-Kersakoff's commission, more particularly the last, to the careful consideration of the Indian Government:—

"All tribes, without exception, the Christians as well as the Muhammadans, are placed under conscription." 2. The recruits from the Caucasus will be enrolled in cavalry and infantry drushines. The former will consist of Muhammadans; the latter of Christians. The term of service is three years. All drushines will be officered equally by natives and Russians.

The fact is we don't half utilize our strength. The Russians are more clear-sighted. Both Loris Melikoff and Alihanoff are members of "subject races;" many of their generals are Germans, and it is notorious that every competent man in their civil service is either of German or of Jewish extraction, not infrequently of both.

WE are glad to see that a journal like the Vienna Vaterland, whose tone is usually pretty much that of the Austro-Hungarian Foreign Office, agrees with the conclusions which, in a recent article as to our relations with Turkey, we felt bound to urge. It was a blunder, says this paper, of Mr. Gladstone's Government to forget that England, having so many Mahommedan subjects, was bound to cultivate good relations with the Mussulman States. The newspaper adds:—"By showing ill-will to Turkey, Mr. Gladstone gave a chance to the Russians which they have been quick to use. And now Turkey has grown somewhat dangerously independent, and is able to exact rather humiliating concessions from England as the price of assisting her old ally out of the Egyptian trouble. The traditional alliance between England and Turkey had been brought about by statesmen who thoroughly understood English interests; and this alliance will have to be formed anew, unless England is prepared to see another Power utilise the services of the old friend whom she has slighted."

THINGS certainly do not look healthy at the Indian Penal Settlement at Port Blair, in the Andamans, where matters seem, to say the least of it, managed in a very "happy-go-lucky" way. Port Blair immortalised itself by the murder of the first, and, we think, the only Viceroy who, from a high sense of duty, visited it; but the lax management, which alone could have allowed such a dire catastrophe to happen, does not seem to have been in any way checked by its occurrence. The record of a month or so is lively. In February an inspector of police was killed; on April 2, two native police-officers were shot in the lines by one of their own men; and, to cap all, "It was only the other day," says the Indian Daily News, "that a gang of Burmese convicts managed to escape, and to steal a number of rifles and a quantity of ball ammunition. They got clear away into the forest, and subsequently made a raid upon the store godown at North Bay, from which they evidently hoped to obtain a supply of necessaries and food. The petty officer in charge endeavoured to protect the godown, with the result that the Burmese shot him dead; they then retired into the forest again. The Kwang-tung was subsequently sent round the coast to see what had become of these men. Her searching parties came upon the Burmese and fired upon them, killing two and wounding some of the others, but the bulk of the gang again escaped without any of them being captured. At the time the mail left Port Blair there were ten or twelve of these desperadoes at large, and known to possess arms and ball cartridges. It is not to be wondered at if the residents feel chary of moving about after dark, or if a feeling of general insecurity had begun to prevail. There must be something wrong when such occurrences as those we have noticed have to be guarded against. The Government cannot afford to allow its penal settlement to become a prey to disorder, and we trust, therefore, that steps will be taken to remodel the police, and to place the force under closer and firmer supervision. It cannot be sufficiently officered."

Whom are we to hang? Whenever anything goes wrong we are told that the "system is in fault." We may profanely say, "Hang the system!" But, unluckily, the "system" has no body to be either kicked or hanged. Verily, we are glad that fate has not led us to reside at Port Blair!

With reference to a recent article, we insert the enclosed from the Indian Daily News as to the progress of European volunteering. We shall be anxious to see what will be done as to enrolling Natives, of whom there will be no lack if they be called on:—

The Indian volunteer force is benefiting largely by the hostile feeling which Russia's proceedings have aroused. The ranks of the existing regiments are receiving considerable augmentations, and corps of reserve volunteers are being formed all over the country. Calcutta was early in the field, and without trenching upon what may be called the regular volunteer corps, has already mustered upwards of 360 men, quite 90 per cent. of whom have undergone military training already, either in volunteer regiments or in the regular army. The Government of India has graciously accepted the offer of service tendered, and sanctioned the formation of a Calcutta reserve volunteer battalion, with an expression of much satisfaction at the promptitude with which the members who have submitted their names came forward. Madras has shown great energy in this connection. In every district of that presidency meetings have been called by the district officers, and the European and Eurasian public have responded very readily. Bombay was somewhat behind, but a meeting was held there last week, and an influential committee was formed which may be expected to make up, by the energy with which the scheme will be prosecuted, for some measure of tardiness in its inception.

In our last issue we expressed a hope that a good "Indian team" for Wimbledon would be got up this year; we are rejoiced to observe that effect is being given to this hope, and that a body of well-known shots is being selected. It is stated that but Rs. 10,000 are required, a sum which there can surely be no difficulty in raising.

Our last issue will have prepared our readers for the announcement that the bulk of the territory claimed by the Russians, and especially Penjeh—the only place, be it noted, for which they thought it worth while to shed a drop of blood—have been conceded to them. In the pro-Russian Daily News of Saturday last we read:—

"We are enabled to state on the highest authority that the reply of the Russian Government to the counter-proposals of her Majesty's Government on the subject of the Afghan frontier was received in London yesterday, that it involves an acceptance of these proposals, and thus practically settles in a satisfactory manner the whole question of the Afghan boundary. Both Meruchak and Zulfikar remain in the possession of the Ameer. The work to be done by the Frontier Commission will apply only to details; the main features of the delimitation have now been finally fixed. The negotiations have been conducted on both sides in a most friendly and conciliatory spirit, resulting from a mutual desire to effect the settlement of this at one time threatening question."

Meruchak, be it remembered, the Russians did not possess; and Zulfikar, if occupied at all, had certainly not been occupied in force.

THE tract in dispute was that comprised in a parallelogram, bounded on the north by a straight line drawn from Sarakhs to the Murghab, on the south by the Paropamisus chain of mountains—rather of hills—and east and west by the Murghab (the river of Merv) and the Heri-road (the river of Herat) respectively, being about 150 miles from north to south, and 100 miles from east to west.

WHEN the Russians accepted the proposal of a Frontier Commission, they had none of this tract; after the Penjeh massacre they were in possession of the whole of it; they had surreptitiously seized it, and have been allowed to retain it, we may almost say, in its entirety.

RUSSIAN journals are pardonably proud of this success, and have required such preposterous concessions by still more preposterous demands. They want diplomatically to extrude us from Afghanistan as they extruded the Afghans by force of arms from Penjeh.

ACCORDING to the Moscow Gazette, Russia cannot ignore England's increased concern for the Afghan army and fortifications, as England has more than once succeeded in developing the military power of barbarous States for purposes of her own, and the appearance of a well-armed and properly drilled native army in the vicinity of Russian Central Asia cannot be left out of the Russian calculations. The fortification of Herat must be met by corresponding measures on the side of Russia, and a railway branch must be constructed in that direction. England with one hand is signing an instrument of peace, and with the other is arming the Ameer. If the buffer is made too hard and inelastic it will cease to be a buffer at all, and will only add to the catastrophe in the event of a collision with England. "Afghanistan," continues M. Kaikoff, "can remain a buffer between Russia and England only as long as the status quo of its political and military organisation, as well as the former degree of English influence over the country, is maintained. England now places the matter on such a footing that an arrangement about the frontier is not enough. When negotiations were begun, in other circumstances, a year ago, the Afghan status quo, in everything except frontiers, was taken for granted; but now it requires explanation. The negotiations must finish as they began, under the same conditions. Otherwise it will turn out that England, without firing a single shot, has made a new acquisition, and only paid for it by the temporary loss of prestige in Asia; while we shall, in the long run, be obliged to give way, or bear the weight of fresh burdens that were by no means contemplated at the beginning of the negotiations."

The worst has to come. We hope some inquiry will be made in Parliament whether a statement so degrading to England as the ensuing can be true? He would, however, probably be met with some disingenuous quibble.

The semi-official Warsaw Tagblatt states that the main stipulations were that England should abandon all pretensions to interference with Herat, and that Russia should be allowed to send a diplomatic agent to Cabul. The article concludes as follows:—"If England loyally intends to confine her influence to the natural limits of India, and to leave Russia unrestricted freedom in Central Asia, an amicable and lasting modus vivendi will be established between the English and Russian Governments."

ON the entire subject of the negotiations respecting the Afghan frontier—so far as the Government think fit to reveal them—a second Afghan Blue-book has just been issued. We shall further advert to it in a proximate issue; but may as well at once say that its revelations seem to us as meagre as the result of the "palaver" has been unsatisfactory. That Sir P. Lumsden, "interviewed" by the Times correspondent at Constantinople, should think the latter is not to be wondered at. Premising that Sir Peter is far too patriotic a man to complain to any correspondent of the scandalous treatment meted out to him, because he, one of the most distinguished generals of the Indian army, would not follow the lead of the Government and truckle to Russia, we subjoin the words of the report, taken from the second edition of the Times of yesterday:—

Although of course the General was very reticent, it was easy to gather from the tone which he adopted that in his opinion the Afghan Frontier question generally has been allowed to become more serious than it might have been if so many mistakes had not been made, and especially if the extreme limit of Russian advance had been strictly made to be the desert zone, when no pretext could have been put forward for further expansion or encroachment with any sort of plausibility. When once that limit, he holds, is overstepped, the subject becomes at once complicated by questions of water supply, pasturage, and every other element of chicane which the Russians are so able in handling, and so apt to bring forward. On these grounds, the General evidently believes that the difficulty has been only temporarily smoothed over, and that the Russians are only too visibly bent on re-opening it on the first opportunity in the very near future, in a period to be reckoned only by a few weeks, or, perhaps, months. The General would seem to fall in with the Turkish view, that Russia's immediate object, not excluding other schemes, is to concentrate our attention, neutralise our strength, and put pressure on our policy by a direct menace of our Indian interests, in order to be left freer scope in her aggressive aims in the direction of the Turkish possessions.

As we are going to press we receive the telegraphic account of a disastrous earthquake which has devastated Srinagar and a large portion of Kashmir. In the capital alone fifty persons are said to have been killed; but those who know the town will probably fear that the square of that number would more nearly indicate the actual loss of life. The full details cannot, of course, reach us yet awhile.

The death of the High Priest for all India of the considerable sect of the Boras is announced by this mail. He died at the age of seventy, and is to be succeeded by the oldest of his sons, who, like the Passover lamb of the Jews, is "without blemish and without spot." This qualification is, it would seem from the Bombay Gazette just to hand, denied to the eldest-born son. The importance of the sect, and the lucrative nature of the post, a lakh yearly (in spite of which the late Moollah managed to incur debt to the tune of 10 lakhs), make the succession a matter of importance to many Mussulmans.

We are very sorry to hear from the native Rast Goftar that the disappointment in connection with the great Bombay Exhibition is increasing. When large amounts were subscribed to the guarantee fund it was believed—and the first chairman gave us reason to believe—that any bank would advance money for the necessary expenditure on the security of the fund. We regret to hear that this expectation is not likely to be fulfilled, and that no bank will advance money on the strength of the guarantee bonds. Can Government do nothing more?

The Indian Courier (Benares) says:—

To us at a distance, and with whatever information concerning the affairs, past and present before us, we consider the proposed reference of the question to arbitration to be degrading to the British nation. The proposal to refer the question to arbitration ought to have come from the Russian Government. In the ordinary affairs of life, in a contest between individuals, it is for the aggressor to propose to go to arbitration. The same rule applies to international affairs. England feels aggrieved at certain unjustifiable proceedings on the part of the Russians. She claims satisfaction, but Russia pleads justification. It is for Russia to convince England that she is in the wrong. If she fails to do so, it is for her to propose to refer the dispute to a third party. Russia has to set herself to right with the world, not England. We cannot, therefore, conceive how Eng and could so far forget her honour as to propose to Russia to refer the matter to arbitration. Desire for peace does not satisfactorily account for this reversal of the natural course of things. The procedure is humiliating enough.

Chit Chat.

SIMLA is to know "Peterhof" no more; henceforth the little house on the hill is to be designated "Viceregal Lodge." What a snub to the Russians!

Of all royal houses in India none are more quaint and enveloped in oddities than the noble family of Travancore. Amongst other curious customs, the Maharaja, on his accession, is placed in a balance, and an amount of gold equivalent to the monarch's weight is distributed amongst the Brahmins. How the latter must pray for a fat king!

THE Grand Old Man's habits of thought are contagious. Some time since a young maiden of six summers was asked by a teacher, on the occasion of a debauch on tea and toast, whether she would take butter or jam. "I should like, please, some jam, with a little butter underneath it," was the ready rejoinder of this precocious infant. What a pity this genius happened to be of the sex female! Had it been otherwise, the fond parent might have seen her offspring Prime Minister of England!

It has often been the occasion of wonder whence come the people who live in the new houses that are constantly being built in our towns and villages; but what is to be said about the consumption of tea? Fifty years ago the total imports of this material for the cup which "cheers but not inebriates" amounted to no more than 300,000lbs. annually. Now more than 60,000,000lbs. come from India alone.

WHAT a nice religion is Hinduism—to commit whatever sins one likes during twelve months in the year, and to wash them all away with one dip in the sacred Ganges; very comfortable, indeed. One would not mind, under these conditions, being a Cabinet Minister called upon to give disagreeable explanations.

THE private secretary of an eminent member of the House of Commons was stopped on the way to the centre of legislation; his bag was overhauled, and therein was discovered, not dynamite, but his master's speech. What a lucky escape for the House!

One result of the "wars and rumours of wars" is being felt at Simla. There are no men at that locality, which is usually peopled almost solely by scarlet coats. What about dances, flirtations, and all the various doings of a gay exodus?

"WHAT would you do with a watch which sometimes went too fast, sometimes too slow?" was asked of a small schoolboy. "Sell it," was the ready and quick-witted reply of the future Rothschild of commerce.

"PERMITTED" to return to duty is the quaint and somewhat misleading phraseology used by the Government when a poor, half-cured wretch with a diseased liver is torn from the bosom of his family, and ordered back to India to fight the Russians; or, rather, to make believe that the "Powers that be" are in earnest.

THE Salvation Army at Madras is alive to the importance of turning an honest penny whenever and wherever they can. Quite recently they sent some lads through the Black Town crying out "War Paper." The poor deluded natives, thinking the issue had some connection with the impending war with Russia, flocked in crowds and purchased the paper by thousands, only to find that they had been deceived—of course, unwittingly; but when people of more profane professions act like this in England, an outraged British public now and again appeal to the magistrate. But piety covers a multitude of sins.

THE Nizam of Haidarabad is reported to be investing largely in Government paper. Good; but what says Russia to this example of misplaced confidence?

MUCH has been heard about the vagaries of Bengali Babus in examinations; but what is to be thought of those who set such questions as "Give us the feminine of John and Charles." It reminds one of the story of a distinguished military officer, who, upon presenting himself for examination in Hindustani, was given a prescription for cholera to turn into a strange dialect. Upon such terms a man might well despair of knowing his own tongue "as she is spoken."

CONJEEVERAM is blessed with a municipality which only allows one blot in the sanitary condition of the place—water. The tanks in which the people bathe and wash their clothes are filled with water which is "stagnant, green, oily, and totally unfit even for cleansing a drain!" It does not need many such "blots."

MADRAS is defenceless. But no, this cannot be!—where is Mr. Grant Duff?

MAHABLESHWAR is gaining immortal glory with its drinks—a strawberry ice swamped in milk punch is one receipt, a lemon ice dissolved in whiskey is another beverage; but, in the name of all that is wonderful, what is the Mahableshwar hair-curler?

A RECENT ball at the Bombay Sanatorium was a great and unexpected success, so far as number was concerned. The male sex were in strong muster, but, alas! fetched from the wilds of the districts they were wanting in the "latest crawl" and the most "fashionable lurch." Yet, withal, they did duty for the warriors.

How can it be? But it is so! A modern army expends more ammunition during time of peace than in war. The explanation is simple; when hostilities commence target-practice ceases. Then human beings are aimed at.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HOME LETTERS, WRITTEN BY THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD.*

There is a feeling in the human breast which prompts mankind to consider the mighty of the land as different beings to the ordinary herd who "live and move and have their being" upon this our mundane sphere. It seems scarcely within the range of imagination that monarchs and statesmen, having in their hands the destinies of an Empire, should be composed of the same flesh and blood as the humble peasant who tills his field, indifferent to wars and rumours of wars regardless of troubles and difficulties which with him centre in the one daily struggle to procure daily bread. Simple in habit, void of ambition, can such a being have the same instincts, the same passions, the same cravings, the same failings as the Minister in purple, directing, controlling, struggling, full of honour, yet with the canker of disappointment gnawing at times the heart's vitals. The "Home Letters" of Benjamin Disraeli will remove some mists of ignorance. Read by the light of subsequent history, when the stripling became in the fulness of time the Right Honourable the Earl of Beaconsfield, Prime Minister of England, they show, to no inconsiderable extent, the workings of the mind of an individual who figures largely in the annals of this country.

At every turn in these interesting letters—letters which will delight many dead to the charms of politics or the attractions of the Parliamentary arena—there peeps forth, unconsciously as it were, but none the less clearly and distinctly, a love of home.

"Wild bird that fliest so lightly,
Ah, whither dost thou roam?
Thou art a wanderer rightly,
Thou hast not left thy home."

These lines written by young Disraeli when sailing o'er the Ægean Sea, and many other passages breathing the same feeling, are a keynote to his character, the imagination insensibly wanders to the scenes of after years, when their author, surrounded by all that can ennoble life, and add pleasure to existence, a beloved and trusted Counsellor of his Sovereign, pined to withdraw from the midst of the dazzling glories of State to the simple pleasures of his house at Hughenden, where, in company with a wife to whom he was fondly attached, he loved to glory in the joys of home. The Statesman had now in heart and mind assumed the rôle of the peasant.

Scarcely less perceptible from his letters is the pleasure he derived from the scenes of Nature. Instances teem. At Gibraltar he writes that the passage "between the two opposite coasts of Africa and Europe, with the ocean for a river, and the shores all mountains, is far the sublimest thing I have yet seen." Cadiz is "brilliant beyond description." At Corfu he found "gleaming waters, woody isles, cypress, olive, vine, a clear sky, and a warm sun." The "dying glory of a Grecian eve, bathing with warm light a thousand promontories and gentle bays, and infinite modulations of purple outline," causes him to loathe a "barbaric splendour and turbulent existence" amidst the gay cities of the world. At Athens its classical reminiscences were lost in admiration for its "truly beautiful" charms—charms increased by the delicate tints of a peculiar lurid sunset which he had the good fortune to witness. Constantinople, indescribable in its beauty and sublimity, with its cypress groves, its domes, its gondolas, its gay costumes, its magnificent situation, is left to "imagination" as beyond the pale of description. These and similar passages all testify to his unbounded love of scenery. He had learned by the experience of travel to gauge the full meaning of the passage which tells us that Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like a lily of the field. Once again the statesman merged into the simple peasant.

"From grave to gay, from lively to severe," was the verdict on human nature passed by one of England's greatest poets. That a deep knowledge of the inward workings of the soul underlined the aphorism is confirmed by Disraeli's "Home Letters." In the midst of the grand and savage mountain district round Gibraltar, we are reminded that there is not only beautiful scenery, but there are bugs! In the heart of the land of the banditti, where life and purse are in imminent danger, the traveller cannot forget to immortalise one of the party clad in "a white hat and slippers, lively, shrivelled, and noisy as a pea dancing upon tin." Two poor wretches, robbed and stripped by thieves, are taken to Griffiths' Hotel, Gibraltar, where they are about to be again plundered. An elderly matron of very uncertain years has an eye "so brilliant and so full of moquerie, that you quite forget her wrinkles!" The Governor of "Gib." is satirised because he will insist upon going to explore a cave in full uniform, oblivious of the fact that the denizens are monkeys. A bad pen and worse ink are execrated; "it is like writing with blacking and a skewer." Home is "a mingled picture of domestic enjoyment and fresh butter." Surely this transition from "grave to gay" is the daily experience of the humblest of mankind—action and reaction, pleasure and sadness, melancholy and joy—these are the common lot of poor fallen man, alike of the rich and the poor, be it the peasant in his cot, or the peer in his palace.

In all the above aspects Disraeli was much as other men are, but in one point he was far, very far, different. His knowledge of human nature, that knowledge which in after life developed to a pitch which made him the foremost mind in Europe, peeped forth even at an age when the frivolities of life are too attractive in most cases to leave much room for reflection. "To govern men you must either excel men in their accomplishments or despise them. It should always be a rule to 'leave with a good impression.'" Lawyers always "illustrate the obvious, explain the evident, and expatiate on the common place. Soldiers are boys till they are majors, and sometimes do not even stop there." Such are a few trite and pithy observations scattered throughout the pages of the letters.

The charm, the depth, and, withal, the simplicity of this little volume, enchants at every turn; it shows us the inner workings of a man of whom this country is justly proud, and it is the more gladly welcome in that the symbol is rather the humble primrose of a peasant than the exalted coronet of an earl. The Prime Minister of England is seen as Benjamin Disraeli, but the picture is none the less attractive because the scene is homely, and the prominent figure unknown.

IMPERIAL FEDERATION.*

Roaming as are the propensities of the Anglo-Saxon race, there is one feeling of a distinctly contrary nature, which is seldom or ever wanting in the heart of the wanderer from England's shore—the love of home. The first instinct of the new settler is obviously and unavoidably "self-preservation;" but as time rolls on, and matters become more hopeful in the land of his adoption, thoughts of the old country rise in the bosom, old scenes are recalled, old memories are awakened, hence new aspirations arise, new fancies come into play. This is the link which binds our colonies to their mother-country—a link forged in the workshop of sentiment, it can readily be snapped. Official reserve and indifference may cause a withering blight to descend upon the tender plant of colonial yearnings—official obstinacy and wrong-headedness did cause the loss of America, and may occasion a calamity scarcely less detrimental to the well-being of the Empire at large.

Fortunately at the present moment the tide is flowing in a distinctly opposite direction. Imperial Federation is the watch-cry of the day. What means it?—what are its ends, what its ways? The answer may be gathered from the little pamphlet just published by the Marquis of Lorne. Himself formerly a Governor of one of the largest and most important regions which acknowledge the sway of our beloved Queen, he speaks with the authority due to personal knowledge and high station.

Recent events in the Sudan, when troops from England, from Australia, and from the sunny plains of India, fought and bled together, side by side, are so prominent before the nation, that it is well to be reminded that the recent display of patriotism and of a desire to be the enemy of the enemies of the old country is no new thing in the annals of the Colonies. Early in the century, in the wars against the French, as well as in other more inter-nee contests, the same disposition to fight shoulder to shoulder with England's troops was displayed. But more notably when the standard of Great Britain was unfurled on the shores of the Crimea, the martial ardour of the settlers was aroused within them, and many a stalwart warrior who grasped a sword and handled a musket in that great campaign hailed from the distant lands of Upper and Lower Canada. The perils and glories of the old country have always been the dangers and the triumphs of the new dominions. To ignore such feelings of patriotic loyalty and good-will would be little less than criminal, to encourage and foster them the highest efforts of successful statesmanship. "What, then, may be done?" inquires the noble author. Obviously, in the first place, "all action should be taken only in full accordance with the expressed wishes of the colonists;" there must be "no possibility that anyone should imagine that Downing-street rule is again to be revived at the Antipodes." A step in this direction has already been made as regards the Dominion of Canada, which sends to this country a High Commissioner charged to advise, to counsel, and to suggest in matters affecting the welfare of the people and the land which he represents. The Crown Agents for the Colonies are a less important link in the chain which binds our distant brethren to their mother-country, inasmuch as the functions assigned to them are more administrative than political in their nature. Cannot an attempt be made to associate the Envoys from the Colonies more intimately with the Imperial Government machinery?—and how more satisfactorily than by giving such Agents the privilege of a seat in the British House of Commons, where they could raise their voice of warning, and tender counsels, inspired by an intimate acquaintance with the feelings and wants of the peoples they have studied, and whose wishes they intimately know. The power of voting might be withheld as unnecessary—alike undesired and undesirable. The suggestion is new, but it merits consideration. Such members would form a buffer between public opinion this side of the water, and the aspirations of the Colonists in far distant lands—on both sides more knowledge of each others' wants would be developed, the risk of unadvised action would dwindle to a minimum, and the legislation of ignorance would become well-nigh an impossibility.

The next step in Imperial Federation is the encouragement of judicious emigration, as tending alike to benefit the old country which the exiles quit as to enrich the New Dominions where the wanderers settle. Rightly and carefully considered, steps in this direction, indeed, vitally affect the welfare of this country itself. Half-a-million souls are yearly added to the population of these isles. What is to become of this seething mass of humanity, as in the struggle for existence many are, and must of necessity be, pushed out by more fortunate and able competitors? The "survival of the fittest" is a maxim which cannot be gainsaid, but it involves the most appalling and heartrending scenes of misery and destitution, and in the end will leave a wake of crime, the contemplation of which may well stagger the hearts of those who look beneath the surface of England's prosperity. From this point of view alone emigration must be hailed as a priceless boon, benefiting alike the giver and the receiver.

One aspect of the question must not be overlooked. A perusal of Lord Lorne's volume will, without doubt, serve to convince the most sceptical mind that the Colonies are a source of wealth and power to the mother-country, but this can only be the case so long as Old England remains mistress of the seas. Were our navy to be allowed to decay, were the fleet unable to protect our commerce or paralyse our foes, then the widely-stretching and unprotected shores of the Colonies would add to our weakness, and increase the strain upon our enfeebled empire and a shattered sovereignty. Absit omen.

It would not be fair to take leave of the Marquis of Lorne's brochure on "Imperial Federation" without an allusion to its absence from party spirit and polemical declamation. Plain, simple, concise, and, withal, thoughtful, it is calculated alike to interest and instruct, to diffuse knowledge and to promote study.

RAILWAY MANAGEMENT AT STATIONS.

Mr. Ivatt's work on "Railway Management at Stations" embodies the experience of many years acquired in India, America, and England, showing how "to do most work in the least time." Its object is primarily to enable young men in the service of the various companies to qualify themselves for higher employment; but assuming that the information it imparts is sound and trustworthy, of which there is little doubt, the book may well serve as a "vade mecum" for labourers in the same sphere in India; that this assumption is well founded, is strengthened by the circumstance that a smaller work of the same nature, published by Mr. Ivatt in 1861, was cribbed "wholesale, retail, and for exportation" to form the nucleus of a book of "good instructions" for our swarthy railway employés the other side of the water.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3, 1885.

THE STATE OF THE BRITISH NAVY.

It is not without a feeling of, we hope, legitimate pride, that we recall the fact that it was to ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL that Sir Thomas Symonds addressed the first of the remonstrances which he has so continuously and so ably urged, through the columns of the Press, on successive Administrations, regarding their fatal neglect of the efficiency of the Navy—its efficiency absolutely, its efficiency relatively, not only to a contest with one Power, but to a combination of many adversaries. A communication from the gallant Admiral, enclosing his reply to a decidedly uncourteous and possibly "officious" article in the last Edinburgh Review, gives us occasion to refer to this all-important matter. We have no desire to trench on the more immediate province of professional journals by entering into details, but wish to confine ourselves to general principles; and, having regard to the space at our command, to do this in as few words as possible.

We all know that the days in which we could proudly and truly boast that the low water-mark of France was the boundary of England are gone, never to return. A torpedo boat, on Brennan's system, might run across the Channel, and wake up a slumbering sentry (but we believe the sentries have, from respect to the British taxpayers, who has, nevertheless, to pay twenty millions for the privilege of not being protected, been abolished) at the "eighty-ton gun" fort at the end of the Admiralty Pier at Dover.

Now, a good many people will, until this sad event occurs, fail to realise the bearing of this change in our position. In former days, not only did our insularity protect us, but, our population being smaller, we imported far less grain and other provisions; and, as our fleets ruled the sea, the vessels employed to bring articles of consumption were adequately protected. All this is reversed. We are not now really insular. We import bread-stuffs and provisions of all kinds by millions instead of thousands of tons, and our war ships do not rule the sea, so that commercial vessels are not protected. What this means let the Edinburgh Reviewer tell us; out of his own mouth shall he be judged.

More than ever were the galleons to Spain are our provision ships to us; they are a necessity of life itself. The loss of gold and diamonds would be disaster; the loss of cotton and other staples of commerce would be ruination; the loss of corn and beef and mutton would be death.

Divested of metaphor, this means that we could be starved into submission in a month or two. Sir Thomas tells us :—

More than half the tonnage of our food, merchandise, &c., is carried in sailing vessels and slow steamers which cannot be convoyed or protected, they must therefore remain in port or be lost. Are we in a position to give adequate protection to that commerce? Most certainly not, quite impossible. It could be easily done with sufficient numbers of belted armour-clads, &c. The purchase of the merchant clippers against only Russia and the building in all haste five belted cruisers proves that the Admiralty do not think so.

Both Sir Thomas Symonds and his antagonist devote much time to the inquiry, whether our Fleet is, or is not, equal to the French, and the Admiral's ripper professional knowledge enables him to lay bare, with unsparing hand, several most important flaws in the Reviewer's argument, proving, to our mind conclusively, that, so far from being able to adopt Louis XIV.'s proud motto, "nec pluribus impar," "not unequal to several," we are in one case at least, "singulis impar," "not a match for one."

But all this decantata fabula as to comparison of English and French vessels, if not altogether irrelevant, has always seemed to us to be wide of the mark, and to leave all but untouched the most important consideration. Between the French and English navies there can, in our view, from the nature of the case, be no real comparison but in one way. What have the two to do? Make a rule-of-three sum :—As the duties of the English Fleet are to those of the French, so should the number of English ships be to those of France. Work this out, O Admiralty!

We shall be under-estimating in saying that the British Navy has threefold, if not fourfold, the work to perform which devolves on that of France. Therefore, as things stand, it is manifest that, to paraphrase Euclid, two approximately equal fleets, with different amounts of work to perform, are not equal.

So much for comparison. If there be one, let it be on a fair basis. We have seen that the Navy would have to be increased threefold to cope but with one Power. The conclusion is startling enough, and, possibly, much less—but more by far than we have—would suffice. But equality with France is but one factor of the problem, which, if stated fairly, is not to be superior at all points to but one Power, but to be at any given point superior—we do not say to any possible, but, at least—to any probable combination of Powers. We have not—since we have alternately insulted and fawned on every first-rate European State—too many friends in Europe, or, for the matter of that, in Asia either; and who can say what combination may at any time be formed against us? Yet, between our solution of the problem, how to face, at any given point, such a coalition, and the starvation into submission of the once proud British nation, there is not, even allowing for all that pluck could and would do (humanly speaking), the ghost of an alternative.

We have referred to this point at length because people are too prone to forget it. The public cannot feel, ought not to feel, no intelligent man does feel, that sense of security of which he should never have been deprived. Nothing saps the vigour of a nation, as nothing saps the vigour of a man, like the abiding sense of insecurity.

As Horace of old, through the mouth of Regulus, would tell us, for true national manliness (the "Civis Romanus sum" feeling, which Palmerston and Beaconsfield fostered, and which the present Government has done its utmost to destroy), alternate braggadacio and abject apology are no substitute. Are we to imagine all Europe—let alone Asia—so purblind as not to distinguish between palaver and power—really well-grounded self confidence? Says Horace:

"(Nor) manhood true, when once destroyed,
Can be replaced by counterfeit employed."

We are by no means fanatical optimists. We know that we cannot, to use a vulgar phrase, always be "cock-of-the-walk." France, Italy, Spain, have all seen the day of their hegemony of Europe. To adopt Hector's well-known words as to Troy:—

"Somewhen the day must arrive, when England's power will perish; Royalty's self, and the folk which its splendid dynasty governs."

But it is the duty of the Government to avert that day to the very utmost; to relegate Macaulay's New Zealander to his native land for the longest conceivable period. Have they done this as regards the Navy, our first line of defence? In the opinion of Sir T. Symonds, and in our own, distinctly and emphatically, No!

THE TRUCE WITH RUSSIA.

THE nation will have learnt with surprise—not unmingled, in those who know anything of the past history of the question, with real alarm—the terms to which the Government have assented, rather than utilise, for the purpose for which they were obtained, the eleven millions which, under a distinctly delusive statement, they procured from a too-confiding Parliament. The anti-English Papers are, of course, loud in their praise of any unpatriotic Government, and the present Administration assuredly may justly claim from them, on this occasion, more than usually fulsome laudation.

In brief, we have, on the ipse dixit of M. Lessar, given to Russia all she really asked, retaining for Afghanistan only Zulficar and Meruchak, well knowing that both Mr. Condie Stephen and Sir P. Lumsden were on their way home with full personal knowledge of the entire district, respecting which the questions arose. The Russians have not even reculé pour mieux sauter. But they will sauter, nevertheless, and that ere long. Our remarks on the match, "Staal and Lessar v. Granville and Hartington" have been more than justified, for even we never adumbrated so complete a surrender of Anglo-Afghan interests.

"A satisfactory and mutually honourable settlement!" Satisfactory! by giving up nearly all that was asked for. Earl Granville would find it quite possible to have a "satisfactory settlement" with the premier venu Spanish bandit on the same terms. The bandit, as we learn from Disraeli's letters, would let him keep a dollar or two to find his way home with.

Honourable! As honourable as obtaining money for one purpose and using it for another.

And that nothing should be wanting to our humiliation, M. Lessar is to go out, to override, on all important points, our representative, Colonel Ridgeway, on the plea that, having seen Earl Granville in negotiation recently, he, of all people, is the best informed as to the result arrived at. If, in the course of the "delimitation," there be a strong strategical position, it needs no gift of prophecy to say that Russia will have it.

No rational being can doubt that this news will have the most deplorably disastrous effect on the Native Princes. Why should we fight for a Power which will only leave us in the lurch? will be their, not unnatural, argument. Can we blame them, when we betray our own interests, if they do not give us credit for scrupulously observing those of our allies?

THE RUSSIAN TRANSCASPIAN RAILWAY.

We are indebted to the Times of the 29th for the following interesting information as to the Russian Transcaspien Railway, stated to be drawn from official sources. The line was open at the beginning of the year from Michaelovsk on the Caspian to Kizil Arvat, 143 miles; there can, however, be no doubt that it has since been extended; indeed, the permanent way is said to be nearly complete, though as yet unprovided with rails, as far as Askabad. The gauge is the usual Russian one of five feet, the fuel chiefly naphtha, of which, as is well-known, there is a practically inexhaustible supply near Baku—from which, indeed, the Caucasus "the burnt" doubtless derives its name. The line is single, and possessed, three years ago, twenty-five engines, of which half were constructed to consume wood; the vans and trucks numbered 250, the former carrying nine tons; mixed trains ran twice weekly, and goods' trains daily, the entire line being under military management.

Michaelovsk, the terminus of the line on the Caspian side, is a wretched post, admitting, in the most favourable circumstances, vessels of six feet draught only. Troops and stores are conveyed to Krasnovodsk and there transhipped. Engineering difficulties have, for the present, prevented the often-proposed and long-desired connection by railway of Krasnovodsk and Michaelovsk.

BAD news for the owners of cinchona plantations! The late excellent Mr. J. E. Howard, the great preparer of, and authority on, quinine, would have been in despair. In a manufactory of aniline dyes, a skilled chemist had (said the chairman, Mr. Justice Brandt, at the forty-fourth anniversary meeting of the Madras Presidency College) been employed, and an efficient substitute for quinine discovered. The discovery is not so recent that it may not have been duly tested; but, important as it is, should it prove to be a real one, we have heard but little about it of late. Still it behoves those who possess plantations of the tree producing this inestimable tonic to see that their nose be not put out of joint.

How brightly do little joys beam upon a soul which stands on a ground darkened by the clouds of sorrow; so do stars come forth from the empty sky, when we look up to them from a deep well.

LIFE'S harmony must have its discords; but, as in music pathos is tempered into pleasure by the pervading spirit of beauty, so are all life's sounds tempered by love.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 9, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, May 22nd; Madras and Allahabad, May 20th; Calcutta, May 20th.

ON a motion condemning the manner in which it is proposed to raise the means to defray the cost of the "policy" for which the eleven millions were granted, a "policy" described by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach as representing nothing but "baffled diplomacy and purposeless slaughter," the Government were, at two this morning, defeated by a majority of 12 in a house of 516 members; and this in spite of a declaration of Sir C. Dilke, subsequently emphasised by Mr. Gladstone, that it was "a matter of life and death" to the Administration; Mr. Gladstone adding—which we can well believe—that he "does not envy those who, if they get the victory, will have to bear the consequences" of his own unparalleled blundering. However inconvenient to "swop horses while crossing a stream" we shall rejoice in the result of the division, should it lead, be who will in power, to the adoption, henceforth, of a manly policy. For it is vain to disguise the fact that it not the Budget alone, one-sided as it was, which has subjected the Government to this defeat. Deep-rooted disgust at their conduct of foreign affairs, and distrust of it in the future, have played no insignificant part in causing alienations and "abstentions" of hitherto faithful adherents. Earlier in the evening, Mr. Cross, in answer to Mr. Arnold, said Sir Peter Lumsden's position as Commissioner had not been annulled. Sir Peter had always held and asserted the opinion, entirely independent of party questions, that the evacuation of Candahar was a mistake; and, while not holding himself responsible for alleged utterances incorrectly reported by newspaper correspondents, he entirely disavowed any intention to attack the Government of which he was a servant.

A REPORT of the assassination of the Ameer of Afghanistan has been persistently circulated during the last few days. Of course the Russians are delighted. With his usual acuteness Lord Granville has inserted the name of the Ameer "Abdurrahman" in all his communications with M. de Staal; with the obvious consequence that if the Russians can put Abdurrahman out of the way, they can urge, as the Norosti does, that "Russia's hand" (never much fettered, by the way, by any stipulations) "will be quite free, and she will be able to pursue her own devices and interests." Probably a ballon d'essai, for the news, professing to come from the Caucasus, and in which there is no inherent improbability, has been proved to emanate from Vienna.

THE best informed Native papers do not at all approve of the recent action of the Government, the real motive of which they see to be "peace at any price." Witness the Hindoo Patriot :—

Painful as it is to loyal subjects to say so, it cannot be denied that honour has not been the prominent object of these negotiations. "Peace at any price" is what has been sought and acquired at the sacrifice of that honour which has hitherto been so jealously guarded by Englishmen.

Of course the palaverings now going on are intended mainly, if not entirely, to keep up appearances, and to save a shred of the mantle which was virtually abandoned with the abdication of all claim to compensation for the marked discourtesy of Russia in not sending her Commissioner, and for the Penjdeh outrage.

No good, adds the writer, has come of such temporizing and truckling. He holds that if war were declared now it might last two years, at the end of which time Russia would be reduced to bankruptcy, while the cost to India would not exceed £50,000,000, imposing on her an additional annual charge of about £2,000,000. On the other hand, peace as now proposed would necessitate the immediate outlay of about £25,000,000 on the fortification of the frontier and the improvement of communications, as well as an increase of the army—which would cost annually about £4,000,000 more.

THE most noticeable utterance of the Native papers, which have been delivered by this Mail, are, as has of late been usual, connected with the impending war. It is pleasant to see that they continue to "speak well of the bridge that carries them over."

The Rafiq-i-Hind, of the 9th May, publishes a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Anjuman-i-Islamiya of Lahore by one of the members, calling upon the natives to raise subscriptions for the aid of those who have suffered by the Russian attack on Penjdeh, as they did in the case of the Turkish widows and orphans during the late Russo-Turkish war. The Rafiq-i-Hind, commenting on this letter, remarks that the suggestion made by the writer of the letter in question is one which the Anjuman should lose no time in adopting, as such an act on the part of the Mahomedans will lead to many good results; in the first instance, it will prove to the Afghans that the Indian Mussulmans deeply sympathise with them in their misfortune; secondly, it will show that the Russian officers are greatly mistaken in thinking that the people of India, and especially the Mahomedans have any longing for the Russians; thirdly, that they will not be welcomed by the people of India; fourthly, that the Indian Mussulmans are so well 'off' under British rule as to be able to assist their co-religionists of other countries; fifthly, such an act will not only tend to arouse the Mahomedans to a sense of sympathy with their brethren all over the world but will also have a very salutary effect on the Mahomedans of Central Asia; sixthly, the greatest advantage which will accrue from such an act will be to make the Mahomedans the enemies of Russia; and lastly, it will prove to the world that the people of India are so well off under the British Government, and so firm in their loyalty to the Queen Empress, that they regard her enemies as their own enemies.

The Ishat us-Sunna, a monthly journal, edited and published by a learned Moulvie of Lahore, has an article entitled "Russia and India," in which the writer remarks that, although the common people are apt to like everything new, yet no person endowed with the faculty of reason can be rash enough to desire a change merely for the sake of change, without first carefully considering whether it would be for the better or the worse. The writer therefore advises the people of India in general, and the Mahomedans in particular, not to forget what they are enjoined in their sacred book, the Koran, which calls upon them to stand firmly by a Government under whom they enjoy the inestimable blessing of peace and order. After quoting from the Koran in support of its argument, the journal points out the blessings which our present rulers have conferred on this country; not the least among which is the liberty which is allowed to the people of India, but which in Russia is conspicuous by its absence.

WE regret to see the announcement of the death, by a fall from his horse, of Major Awdry, R.E., Military Secretary to the Governor of Madras. We hope that a man possessing courtesy, and what may be called "clubbability," will be elected in his room. Mr. Grant Duff's administration may have been able, but it has certainly not been so popular as to make it wise for him to appoint an "unpleasant" man to a position of much social, as well as official, importance.

THAT any speech of the Premier in the House of Commons, on any conceivable subject, will be an adroit attempt to evade the real issue, and to mystify his hearers, has long been known to all Europe, though some Englishmen seem not to have found it out. The "oratio Gladstoniana" (a Gladstonianism) is recognised throughout Germany as equivalent to an ingenious periphrasis of the letter x; that which is—we beg pardon, that which is not—to be discovered. But really Mr. Gladstone surpassed himself on Thursday last. He had, he said, announced, on the 13th March, to the House, the conclusion with Russia of an "arrangement" (called by him, later on, a "solemn—or sacred—covenant"), to the effect that neither Russians nor Afghans were to "advance;" and he made this statement, knowing so little of the precious "covenant" that he had next day to beg the Russian Government to interpret it for him, which of course they did with the strictest regard for British interests. Now, Mr. Gladstone probably uses, in public, more words in a year than any one living. Yet he confesses to absolute ignorance of their meaning! We are no casuists, and, being desirous of knowledge, would like to be informed as to this "solemn" or "sacred" covenant, paraded to get the eleven millions. Where is the solemnity? Are "farce" and "solemnity" convertible terms in casuistical phraseology? And where, oh! where, is the "covenant"? Let Penjdeh tell.

It is the man of chatter versus the man of action. What! says the man of words; the Russians "advance"? Perish the thought! Have I not a "solemn" or "sacred" "covenant" with them to do nothing of the kind? Can-not I Quote Wheaton "and Puffendorf, and Grotius,

And prove from Vattel
(Most exceedingly well)
Such a deed would be quite atrocious?"

Meanwhile the Russians acted. Not as the Boy, in the anti-Jacobin just quoted, acted to the Ambassador, "and cut off his head while he prated." The Russians would have been wiser. They would have, and in this case did, let him prate on, going ahead the while as if he had never existed. "Cut off his head?" No fear! Not likely that they would injure the Goose which could lay such golden eggs as Penjdeh!

The Delhi Gazette says:—

A subscription is talked of in India to support Sir J. B. Phear's candidature. The return is likely to be keenly contested, the Conservative candidate being a very wealthy, and, therefore, of course, a very influential, gentleman. The expenses may go up to about £2,000. If India contributes half of this, say even Rs. 10,000, she will secure a most able and willing advocate in the House of Commons, one who may prove another Fawcett in some respects.

We can only give our best wishes to any candidate, on whichever side, whose return will increase the, at present, grotesquely inadequate representation, in the House, of Indian interests; who will, at least, add one to the sixteen or seventeen gentlemen, who alone, too often, think it worth while to sit out, at the fag-end of the Session, a statement involving the interests of perhaps the most magnificent dependency which centuries have beheld.

WE have often heard of, and, we fear, sometimes laughed at, the aspirations of the Baboo class. Our readers may be diverted by Baboodom in excelsis as below depicted:—

Ten little Baboos, sitting down to dine;
One went to e-school, and then there were nine.
Nine little Baboos, pillars of e-state;
One went to Kallij, and then there were eight.
Eight little Baboos, climbing up to heaven;
One became Deputy, and then there were e-seven.
Seven little Baboos (not know any tricks);
One became Magistrate, and then there were e-six.
Six little Baboos, now begin to thrive;
One became District Judge, and then there were five.
Five little Baboos (don't the Mirror wish 'twere more),
One became Commissioner, and then there were four.
Four little Baboos, climbing up the tree;
One became L.G., and then there were three.
Three little Baboos (not know what to do);
One became G. G., and then there were two.
Two little Baboos (the list is nearly done);
One became Esseketry, and then there was one.
One little Baboo (the goal at last is won);
Became proud England's Premier, and then there were none.

Not a little may be learnt from Professor Vambéry's subjoined letter to the Times. Our lady readers will recognise the power wielded by their sex, and which, if we are to believe Chaucer, they prefer to anything else. Perchance some of them, seeing how annexation, procured by fine gifts, has ruined the Mervites, may be tempted to recall the jewel scene in Faust.

As your St. Petersburg correspondent has taken the trouble to translate and to publish that portion of a paper on a journey to Merv which relates to the Russian doings in that newly-conquered part of the Turcoman country, I am sorry that he has omitted the rather interesting statement by which we learn that the Empress of Russia has also co-operated in the conquest of the above-named place.

The Russian writer of the said paper, which appeared in the Turkestan Gazette, mentions, among other details, the influence enjoyed by the widow of the late Chief Makhdumkuli Khan among the Merv Tekkes. This lady, called Gul Djemal (i.e., Rose-Beauty), occupies a high standing in Merv, and it is owing to her position that Alikhanoff succeeded in entangling these much-dreaded Turcomans in the plot which resulted in the voluntary surrender of the place. We had already during last summer read of the presents handed over by Dondoukoff-Korsakoff to that lady, and now we read in the aforesaid paper that it was her Majesty the Empress of Russia who had sent the richly-ornamented, gold-woven dress to Lady Gul Djemal as a token of consideration, and that the attention paid by the Empress to the widow of the late chieftain has crowned the transactions successfully begun by the astute Caucasian Alikhanoff.

Is it not remarkable that the saying "Cherchez la femme" can also find its application among the rude children of the desert? Well, Russia is always conspicuous for the dexterity of her dealings with Asiatics, and, since your policy is sadly wanting in these qualities, it is very natural that your strictly European straightforward dealing is so easily checkmated by your rival.

GOOD news for Indian tea-planters. The fortnightly circular of Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson, of 38, Mincing-lane, testifies to the continued steady growth of the consumption of Indian and Ceylon teas in this country. From thirty-three per cent. of all teas consumed in the United Kingdom in 1882-3, the proportion rose to thirty-five in 1883-4. This year the proportion has taken a leap two and a-half times as great, from thirty-five to forty per cent.

SIR P. LUMSDEN arrived in good health at Charing-cross at six on Saturday evening. If he was not in good spirits, the reception he met must have speedily revived him. The crowd was very great, and after a distinguished company had been admitted through the barriers, the train drew up, Sir Dighton Probyn, as Equerry to the Prince of Wales, being the first to welcome Sir Peter on having safely "repaired to the metropolis." Sir Peter was almost driven from one end of the platform to the other in his endeavour to satisfy the desire of his friends to grasp his hand. At length those present were satisfied, and a passage was opened to the carriage, through which, amid renewed cheers, he made his way. Ten minutes passed after the arrival of the train before Sir P. Lumsden could drive away from the station. As his open carriage passed through the barriers a hearty cheer was raised by those within the station, which was a signal to those outside to respond with cheer after cheer and the waving of hats and handkerchiefs, in the midst of which Sir P. Lumsden, with head uncovered, passed out of the station into the Strand, where a similar demonstration greeted him. The demonstration was as significant as it was spontaneous, showing alike appreciation of Sir P. Lumsden's services, and disgust at the treatment he has received, on the part of those best qualified to judge.

WE insert the remarks of the Times, in a leading article, on this subject:—

Sir Peter Lumsden, who "repaired to the metropolis" on Saturday evening, met with one of the enthusiastic receptions which are usually reserved for victorious generals. The platform at Charing cross was crowded with distinguished persons, including three field-marshal of the British Army, anxious to offer in person their congratulations upon his safe return, and to testify their high appreciation of the manner in which he has discharged most difficult duties in very discouraging circumstances. But the cordial greeting of personal friends and brother officers, agreeable as it must have been to Sir Peter Lumsden, was less significant than the evidence of popular approbation offered by the presence of a great crowd which filled all the available space inside the station and in its immediate approaches, and overflowed into every neighbouring coign of vantage from which a handkerchief could be waved or a glimpse of the British Commissioner obtained. The course of events on the Afghan frontier has not been such as to give satisfaction to any section of the British people, but it is universally felt that our representatives on the spot are entirely free from responsibility for the mistakes that have been made and the loss of reputation they have involved. Indeed, it is probable that the spontaneous heartiness of the popular greeting on Saturday indicated not only appreciation of Sir Peter Lumsden's exertions, but also condemnation of the policy which has turned them to such small account. His opinions concerning the policy pursued on the Afghan frontier are already generally known, and although many may regret that he should have stated them quite so frankly at the present stage of the Afghan business, popular sentiment, which does not take strict account of the nicer obligations of official position, is evidently none the less favourable because he has given vigorous expression to the general sense of defeat.

Chit Chat.

THE Pioneer points out that Russia holds out inducements to "filibusters and spread-eaglers" to enter her army. Witness the case of the Dagbertain Muhammadan Maksud Ali Khan, alias Alikhanoff, of Penjdeh celebrity, while the British throws open the portals of the High Court to natives of India, as instanced by Syed Mahmud. True; but as for one Syed Mahmud there are a score or more of Alikhanoffs, the Czar's mode of proceeding may be presumed to offer more attractions.

FAILING all other methods, the junior civilians of the North-West Provinces are "riding pillion" with the natives so as to catch the support of Radicals in this country. The argument is, increase the pay of the European, and make up the difference by introducing at the bottom of the list less costly native employés. Good; but how about things when those at the bottom come to the top, and keep out the pale faces in the cold. Will there not then be grumbings loud and deep?

WHAT valuable allies the Pathans must be! Listen to the story of a typical representative of that nation. Jardad Khan Pathan commenced life by getting imprisoned for stealing two donkeys. On his release he did a general trade in burglary for some time, till tired of the monotony of this humdrum way of defrauding his fellow-creatures, he induced a friend to fire a blank cartridge at him one night. Next morning he charged three other members of the confederacy with an attempt to murder him; but facts were against this romantic-souled bravado, who was once again relegated to prison. On his release, disgusted with the treachery of a former companion who had refused to "stand by" him in his time of trouble, the ex-felon incontinently robbed his quondam friend. But now Jardad Khan turned his attention to more serious business. It chanced that the wife of one of his friends had to be put to death, whereupon the enterprising villain volunteered for the job. Accordingly, when he was escorting the hapless matron, and they reached a lonely spot, he stabbed the unsuspecting victim to the heart. Having tasted blood, Jardad went on to murder his own sister-in-law, solely because she had married a man whom he disliked. Not content with this, he induced a friend to shoot the husband. At length Jardad Khan, feeling that he was born for a wide sphere, started on a career of plunder and murder in the plains of Hindustan, first of all repairing to Surat to get a blessing from the venerable Akhund. Fate was, however, against him, and once more he found himself in jail; but the Raja of the district happened to die suddenly, and, according to Oriental custom, the event was signalised by the release of prisoners. Afresh on the wing, the worthy Jardad betook himself for awhile to the paths of honesty, and enlisting as a Sepoy, stood guard over treasures in Kattiawar. He then tried his hand at a Kaluli fruit shop; but industry was not his forte, and for another time he turned his attention to burglary, tempered with sacrilege. Temples, idols, mosques were all plundered indiscriminately, and the adventurers, with Jardad at their head, lived for a time in affluence and luxury; but coming to an end of their resources, they betook themselves by train to Meerut, where the worthy residents were soon treated to a display of robbery and murder on a very extended scale, till the place became too hot for them, and the band were dispersed and broken up. It may safely be asserted that a Pathan is not a very desirable acquaintance.

Who can contend against the Judges of a High Court? None—no, not even in lawn-tennis. Their lordships beat the champions of the Presidency College, Madras, both of whom chanced to be natives. Bravo for the wearer of wigs! Doubtless the game was conducted on legal principles.

WHAT a nice place Burma must be for a medical man! It is the custom amongst the subjects of the "Lord of the Golden Umbrella" to have as many as six or seven doctors in one day, each of whom gives his medicine and gets his fee. But how about the patient? To pay seven men to do the work of one is bad enough, but worse still to take seven times as much medicine as is necessary. The strongest constitution must in the end succumb to such a strain.

In the fourth decade of the present century the Governor-General of India issued a proclamation announcing the approaching invasion of the petty Principality of Coorg by the British troops. This elicited a counter-proclamation by the irate Raja, the conclusion of which ran thus:—"The wicked Christian European, the son of a slave, who resolved to prepare this, should be beheaded, and his head thrown out. The hands, mouth, and head of the person who wrote this should be cut off, and the generation of the low-caste blasphemer and bad European should be burnt down. These hopes are to be fulfilled. All the above subjects are certain. All the wicked Europeans, all the sons of slave girls, have evil intentions that shall come to naught. Very well, very well, my children, we will fill up all your bellies according to your wishes. Be this known to you all. Written on Sunday the 6 of the waning moon of the month of Phalguna." But the "evil intentions" did not come to naught. Coorg is now a British district.

On the termination of a legal inquiry that had lasted for six years, judgment having been delivered by the Chief Justice of Madras, Sir Charles Turner by name, an old lady, deeply interested in the decision, was heard to exclaim, "May he and his live long! What else can I do for him?" Applications for impartiality should be addressed to that old lady.

THOUGH the British Cabinet are not disposed to fight over the Central Asian Question, individuals of lesser note have the courage of their convictions; so it chanced that at Madras an English and an Irish tailor came to blows anent the Penjdeh incident; the result was a visit on the part of the "paddy" to a hospital close at hand.

WHAT a nice place the Shevarry Hills in Madras must be wherein "to spend a happy day?" "No family," it is stated, "should be without" a box of Keating's insect power, as the very dust of the earth teems with insects which bite, irritate, and finally jump away. Maybe the climate is cold and the air invigorating, but if the human frame is to be nibbled to death, we should prefer a less favoured spot wherein to locate ourselves, in corpore vili.

THE Somalis, on the coast of Africa, are a curious race; they are nearly all females—the proportion in one town being two women to one man. No wonder that a wife sells cheap; twenty dollars in cash will buy a fair companion, clothes, ornaments, and all complete. The men do nought, it is said, but chew tobacco; what is the occupation of their spouses is not stated.

WHAT is accuracy? Mr. Cross said in Parliament that a dredge had been at work in Aden harbour since 1883. The Times of India admits this, but complains that the machine in question was little better than an "expensive toy," and as valueless for the purpose to which it was set as would be a thimble to empty a large tank of water.

WHAT's in a name? Fancy the two prominent horses in the Mahableshwar race meeting were "Varmint" and "Honeymoon"—what a mixture!

"One horse was badly wounded and three others came down, throwing their riders, who all had narrow escapes of being cut up." Such is the description of a boar hunt which is termed most "charming." Rude people might question the charm of having one's inside in a plain, and walking home minus a stomach and a few other appendages incidental to digestion. N'importe, all people do not like the same thing.

THE Brahmins of Benares are in a dilemma. The sacred monkey population of the holy city has outgrown all dimensions, and emigration seems the only mode of reducing the surplus population; but where to, and by what means? It is not easy to catch 20,000 or 30,000 chatterers by the tail, and transport them volens, whither they know not.

WOOD, it is said, can be made to last longer than iron. Here is the receipt. Take boiled linseed oil, and stir in pulverised coal to the consistency of paint. Coat the timber therewith, and there is not a man living who will see the wood rot. The discovery is, it may be added, American.

INDIA seems gay. Simla has had its subscription ball; Mahableshwar a carriage accident, the horses being cremated alive; a fire, whereat many poor people were burnt out of house and home, to say nothing of lawn-tennis, badminton, billiard tournaments, et hoc genus omne. Not bad for the sunny land of Ind.

THE Earl of Kimberley, Secretary of State for India, gave a State dinner at the India Office to celebrate Her Majesty's birthday. FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING THE AFFAIRS OF CENTRAL ASIA.*

The last Afghan Blue-book assuredly does not improve on better acquaintance. It costs 6d., and a bigger sixpennyworth of national humiliation was assuredly never presented to Parliament. From the first page to the last it is a constant record of Russian quibbles, energetically protested against by Lord Granville at first, and then tacitly acquiesced in as soon as insisted on by the other side; the protest being, in fact, allowed to "lapse"—a word which will for ever "stink in the nostrils" of every true lover of his country.

It would be amusing, were it not contemptible, to see how much Lord Granville avoids communicating, even to H.M.'s representatives, the facts. As in the last Blue-book, so in the present, he will not say "this or that happened." He tells us what Mr. Gladstone said about it in the House (See No. 230 Blue-book No. 2, No. 17 of present Blue-book No. 5, &c.). And what these statements, after due reference to St. Petersburg to know whether they be in accordance with fact, and after due correction there, are likely to be worth, is matter of fair inference. (That these statements were so referred once, we know; how many times more it may have happened we do not know; for both these Blue-books have been carefully "edited," and it is semi-officially stated that we are to have no more till the close of the "negotiations," that is, till Russian dictation has attained its end, till Parliament has risen, and till no inconvenient questions can be asked for some months.)

One of the first things which struck us on opening the Papers was the quiet naïveté with which the Foreign Secretary suggested to Russia to ask and to have. "Let us," says he, in effect, "get rid of this matter promptly." "I made (to M. de Staal) some observations as to the advantage of promptitude in dealing with such matters, giving as examples the two questions which had recently arisen between Her Majesty's Government and those of France and Germany, in both of which all irritation had been removed by the speedy action of the Government, whose officers were supposed to have given cause of offence." What, in goodness' name, did we do in both the cited "examples"? "Caved in!" in Germany's case, with the most abject apologies. M. de Staal saw the opening at once; va sans dire that he has all along availed himself of it. He had taken the measure of his interlocutor's foot! (No. 19.)

A contrast to this is the tone adopted towards Sir P. Lumsden, who is evidently not a persona grata.

"Reply immediately (No. 23) to facts stated by General Komaroff." Not "General Komaroff's allegations"; that they are facts is assumed.

Another snub to a distinguished general officer placed in a position of exceptional difficulty . . . "Specify" (so runs No. 42) "in each case what you know for certain, what you have reasons to believe, and what is merely based on hearsay evidence." Can anybody imagine such an insulting order being sent to such a man? Any tyro, let alone any officer fit for his post, would surely anticipate it as a matter of mere common sense. Is not Sir Peter Lumsden, with his splendid record of service—much of it Afghan service too—"fit" for such a post? There can be but one answer. But, were it otherwise, who appointed him? "Pick your man, and trust him," was Lord Palmerston's plan, and that of many greater men. But then these were statesmen.

In no one instance is Sir Peter Lumsden encouraged by an expression of confidence, so supporting to an officer serving in such circumstances; whilst all allowance is made for the anxiety of the Russians to uphold their men. Indeed, a desire is expressed to avoid "putting gallant officers on either side on their trial." Earl Granville was not "diplomat" enough to perceive or avail himself of the arguments that the fact of a military man being British Commissioner was purely accidental (the Commissioner might have been a civilian), that Sir P. Lumsden was not acting in a military capacity at all, and could not, therefore, like Komaroff, be "put on his trial" in any military sense; finally, that by even tacitly admitting any military character whatever in the commission, or any possible parallelism between the cases of Komaroff and Sir P. Lumsden, he was directly playing into the hands of the Russians, who had expressly alleged this "military character" as a palliation of the Penjdeh outrage. Diplomacy! Heaven save the mark! and protect British interests in the hands of anyone so hopelessly obtuse as not to see such points after we know not what "diplomatic" experience. He is as helpless as ever in the hands of any competent adversary. The Blue-book, at least, has this merit, that at every page is written in indelible letters—Incapable!

A SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF HINDUSTAN.*

We resume with great pleasure the consideration of this valuable work, commenced in our issue of May 19th.

It will be remembered that our notice, comprising Mr. Keene's first book, broke off at the death of Alamgir in 1707, at the age of ninety.

Mr. Keene observes that this period marks the widest extension of the Mughol Empire. "The cohesion of the extremities was becoming enfeebled;" and there was no Hadrian wise enough to let the god Terminus recede, to abandon some of the outlying members, in order to secure the steady flow of life throughout the system, without which empires, like individuals, inevitably perish. What was lost, henceforth, was lost by the assaults of natural decay, proceeding from within, at least as much as by external violence. We think that it is well that the author should have prefaced his second book by a brief, but adequate, delineation of the Empire at its best, a delineation which we strongly recommend alike to the student and to the reader whose leisure is insufficient to allow his perusal of the entire work. It will interest those who care to know what India was like in the days when Charles II. reigned in England.

Briefly stated, the Empire comprised the provinces which we call Bengal and the North-West Provinces, the Punjab, Cabul, the larger part of the present Bombay Presidency, including Gujarat and the Nizam's dominions, including Berar, but held on precarious tenure.

The revenue may be roughly put at about eleven and a-half millions sterling, though, in some provinces, collected not without difficulty, and therefore, doubtless, not without oppression.

The reign of Bahadur Shah (1707-12), or rather, its termination, on his death, in a state of panic and confusion, most graphically depicted by a contemporary historian, who says that the scene at the capital "was like the day of judgment," seems to be the first noticeable event which presaged the decadence of the Empire. "The bewilderment," says Mr. Keene, "was caused by the incapacity of the Chaghtais for progressive administration." All States, which have since existed, were coming to the birth, and struggling for independent existence. "The Sikhs in the Punjab, the Jāts at Bhurtpoor, the Mahrattas at Poona, Indore, and Nagpoor, all became more or less independent, as did also the Viceroy of Haidarābād."

The duration of the reigns of the Emperors should have been, and in a measure was, conducive to the administration being conducted on something like settled principles. In nearly 150 years, from Akbar's accession to the death of Bahadur Shah, there had been but five Emperors, "and they were all . . . energetic, able, and, on the whole, merciful, rulers. It is probable," adds Mr. Keene, "that all history might be exhaustively searched without discovering any similar record of uninterrupted excellence in despotic rulers."

A succession of reigns of minor importance followed, presenting for especial notice but one event, small as the "cloud like a man's hand," but destined to produce not the sound only, but the reality of a "great abundance of" results. In 1715 it was that the English first obtained, through the patriotism of Dr. Hamilton (who, having cured the Emperor of a tumour, refused any fee but that which would most benefit his countrymen), the Imperial Firman permitting them to hold land over the Hooghly.

The blow which reduced the Empire to a state portending more speedy dissolution than actually occurred was struck, as we all know, by Nadir Shah. Delhi was captured and occupied in March, 1738, and, to avenge the assassination of some of the invader's soldiers, given over to plunder, 120,000 persons being killed in nine hours of a single day, and booty (including an enormous war indemnity) being estimated at 143 millions of British sterling!

Yet, to use Mr. Keene's metaphor, "the swift agony was not immediately final. The welfare of Hindustan," he continues, "was to ebb slowly still. The Empire was to stand a spectacle of tardy ruin, like some monarch of the wood whose trunk has been hollowed by age and its top struck by lightning; yet the old tree continues to cumber the ground, an unsightly and unprofitable mass." Yet the mischief was done, and but once, ten years later, do we find a Hindustani army successfully coping with an invader from the North.

We are now closely approaching the domain of what is strictly to be called the modern history of Hindustan, the period, that is, when the history of the country is closely connected with the operations of European armies, and in part reflects European politics. On this field, already traversed by many able writers, we do not propose to trench, further than to notice a correction by Mr. Keene as to Warren Hastings's conduct towards the Rohillas. This was one of the most formidable indictments against Hastings, and was especially dwelt on by Macaulay, in an essay which his genius has rendered immortal. Mr. Keene shows, in our opinion satisfactorily, that, in soliciting British aid against the Rohillas, the Viceroy of Oudh was acting in the true interests of the province which he governed. The Rohillas, being unable to expel the Mahratta marauders, had, Mr. Keene says, coalesced with, and harboured them; and this band of faithless usurpers, who either would not, or could not prevent their districts from affording a highway for dangerous "marauders" had to be coerced. In support of this view, a quotation from a Robilla source is given by Mr. Keene. "A surprising degree of animosity and discord had long since arisen in Rohilcund, and each person was earnestly bent on the eradication of his neighbour; and, in order to effect that object, ready to enter into league with foreigners and invaders." We recommend Mr. Keene's whole argument (pp. 381-5) to those who may be led by Macaulay's eloquent periods to take for granted Warren Hastings's culpability on this count of the indictment.

By this period (1773) the entire Empire was practically broken up. The Emperor was a puppet in the hands of those who chanced to possess themselves of his person, and on more than one occasion he suffered gross personal indignity and even violence. Decrees and patents were, it is true, issued in his name, but, to obtain them, people had learned to look to their own immediate rulers. Henceforth, for many a year, and until British power was consolidated, Hindustan, taken as a whole, has no history. Its place is taken by the annals of each province.

Yet, even then, the people retained a "sneaking fondness" for the old dynasty which has so long ruled them.

"Le respect," says De Boigne, in 1790, "envers la maison de Timour regnait à tel point que, quoique toute la péninsule se fût successivement soustraite à son autorité, aucun prince de l'Inde ne s'était arrogé le titre de souverain. Sindhia partageait le respect; et Shah Alam était toujours assis sur le trône Mogol, et tout se faisait en son nom."

With this extract, which we may regard as the epitaph of the House of Taimur, we close our quotations and our notice; thanking Mr. Keene for a most instructive, and if rightly viewed as narrating the gradual progress of scores of millions of our fellow-creatures, most interesting book.

TRYDELL—June 1, at Cheltenham, Lucy, relict of Lieut.-General Trydell, formerly Brigadier-General, Commanding at Poona, aged 78.

OBITUARY.

We record the death of the well-known General T. Polwhele, at Cheltenham, at the age of 87. He had served in the Bengal Army since 1815, and began at once to smell powder, being sent to Nipal in the ensuing year. Here is his record:—Entered the Army in 1815, served in the Nepaul campaign in the following year, and accompanied the expedition to Ceylon in 1818. He also took part in the Burmese War in 1824-5, and was present at the attack and capture of Mahatee and Arracin. He was also engaged in the campaigns in Candahar and Afghanistan from 1839 to 1842, and served as Assistant Adjutant-General throughout the operations of the Candahar force under General Nott. He commanded the 42nd Bengal Native Infantry throughout the Sutlej campaign of 1845-6, and was present at the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon, for which services he obtained the brevet rank of lieutenant-colonel. He became colonel in 1854, major-general in 1865, lieutenant-general in 1872, and a general in 1877. General Polwhele married, in 1829, Edith, daughter of Mr. John James, by whom he has left a family.

In Sir W. Mure Muir the Army Medical Department has, notwithstanding his retirement, sustained a great loss. Born in Scotland, and taking his M.D. in 1840, he joined the Army two years later, becoming Surgeon-General in 1873, and Director-General of the Army Medical Department in the following year. Few officers have seen service longer. Sir W. Muir served on full pay for forty years, twenty-four of which were passed on foreign stations, or more varied. So far back as the Crimean time, during which war he served in the Light Division, it was reported of him that his chief knew of no more deserving or competent officer in Her Majesty's service. After a round of stations, the list of which reads like a circumnavigation of the globe, the then Dr. Muir returned to headquarters, and here it was that his most durable, if not most showy, work began. The whole reorganisation of the Medical Department fell, practically, into his hands; and he persevered, through evil report and good report (chiefly the former), in urging the many reforms which he saw to be indispensable to efficiency. The system he introduced has stood the practical test of active service in several campaigns, and it is gratifying to know that many of his most ardent opponents became his warm adherents, admitting the superior farsightedness of the canny old Scotchman. "The better treatment," says the Times, "of the sick soldier, the greater promptitude of care for the wounded, and the more rapid disembarrassment of an army from the impediments which the sick and wounded create, will be the results of Sir William Muir's foresight and firmness; and these advantages will constitute the best monument to his memory."

TUESDAY, JUNE 9, 1885.

ENGLAND AND PERSIA.

In a late issue we referred at some length—we hope not with needless detail—to the relations of our Government with Turkey. We regard them as of the first importance. Commanding, as Turkey does, two of the four possible routes to India, it is the clear duty of a British Administration to cultivate the friendship of its Ruler.

We have seen the importance attached by no less experienced an authority than Sir H. Layard to the personal influence of the British representative over the Sultan. Now, what is true as regards Turkey holds good as to Persia. What, to use a homely, but very true, proverb, is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Few Ambassadors have, at European Courts, the opportunity of exercising any personal influence over the Sovereigns to whom they are accredited. They are seen at receptions, personally accosted by the monarch whenever any special point has to be carried; and, voilà tout. The Sovereign, if not the last, is, except, perhaps, in Russia, assuredly not the first person to be gained. A sensible Envoy will "cultivate" the Prime Minister, visit him at times when he is supposed to be least likely to be "grumpy," smoke with him the "calumet of peace" in the shape of a more or less execrable cigar, and make himself, at least, in a Pickwickian sense, his friend.

Now, in Oriental countries, we have to look above the Vizier; we must watch (what it would be a misuse of language to call policy) the whims of an absolute ruler. An intelligent man would use a very different tone in endeavouring to gain the goodwill of a man, and of a woman. It is hardly incorrect to say that a difference, analogous in kind, if not in degree, is to be observed in dealing with an European, and with an Oriental, Court. The one, like a man, is usually guided by reason; the other, like a woman, influenced by the impulse of the moment. We would not be misunderstood as under-estimating the importance, even in Europe, of the charm of manner which gave Odo Russell—to take one instance of many—an influence, which no other diplomatist possessed, over Bismarck. But what we do wish to point out is the especial value at an Oriental Court of personal ascendancy if brought to bear directly on the individual whose will, or whose whim, sways the entire policy of the realm.

Many of our English readers, to whom the Shah-i-Sháh, the king of kings, is known but by repute, who have seen only the outside of his "Diary" (an interesting work, all the same, as conveying the "unsophisticated impressions" of an Oriental monarch) or himself, as, radiant with diamonds, he was the cynosure of all eyes at the Spithead review some years since, may have some difficulty in realising who and what manner of man he is:—

The present Shah is, perhaps, one of the bravest and most active sovereigns of the present day. He is a brave sportsman; and a man who hunts the leopard on foot, accompanied only by one servant, and never shrinks an encounter, will be generally considered as one possessing considerable courage.

Now, what has been our "record" in Persia? and what is likely to be the impression produced by it? Twice, in particular, at intervals far too long, we sent as Ambassadors to Persia men in all respects suitable for the post—we need hardly say that we refer to Sir J. Malcolm and Sir Henry Rawlinson—and what was the result? On both occasions the English Ambassador was the favoured representative at the Court, and British interests were paramount. The fact is that, as is well observed by the Madras Mail, in an article from which we are about freely to quote, "the immense importance of the Persian alliance to British India has not been duly appreciated at the Foreign Office since the commencement of the present century. As though ashamed of the effusiveness of the double demonstration made by Sir John Malcolm and Sir Harford Jones, the British Government separated Persia from India, and thenceforth treated that Asiatic Power as if it had been a fourth-rate European State. In other words, it took no notice whatever of the corner-stone of Central Asia. Properly managed, Persia might have maintained the balance of power between Russia and England. Had the Shah been furnished with half the resources that have been lavished upon Afghan Rulers, no Cossacks would now be prowling along the borders of Khorassan, prepared to take short cuts across it towards Herat immediately war is declared. Arms of precision, with suitable ammunition, rifled artillery, and English drill officers, would long since have suppressed the man-stealing Turcomans, nor would Russia have been permitted to encroach upon Persian territory. Even the Caspian might still have been an open sea, with no Russian 'factories' established upon its eastern shores. All this was well known to many observers in England, who in vain raised their voices to utter the note of warning. British statesmen are deaf when the piping is not to their pleasure. Living in unworthy terror of ignorant constituencies, they closed their ears to the predictions and admonitions of wiser men, and now, when it is perhaps 'too late' they are beginning to prate about a military mission to Teheran. Certainly not a moment should be lost in endeavouring to strengthen the hands of the Shah, and to confirm and increase any good disposition towards England that he has retained. To him the further advance of Russia would be fatal. The establishment of a Russian 'factory' on the Persian Gulf would imply a Russian railway across Persian territory, and the ultimate absorption of all that remains of that historic land, famous in the annals of the world when Moscow was the appropriate home of the bear, the wolf, and the mammoth. A strong, friendly, independent Persia would be far more serviceable to British interests than an Afghanistan, the prize of the highest bidder." In other words, the Shah, seeing things with the keen eye of self-interest, is beginning to be thoroughly alarmed at the prospect of being closed in on three sides by Russia; and, though still under the glamour of Muscovite diplomacy, might be induced, were the matter properly placed before him, to throw in his lot with us. Yet this critical time has been chosen for filling our Embassy at Teheran with new faces, whose owners probably know not a word of the language. The first Secretary goes to Colombia; the Oriental Secretary to Mexico (where Lord Granville has found the rage for using Persian as the Court language, too strong to be, with due regard to British interests, resisted!); the Vice-Consul to Zanzibar!

We have seen that, when our interests in Persia were represented by men who were conversant with Oriental usages, our influence at Teheran has been great, while the converse has been the case when the Ambassador was acquainted with European diplomacy only. We do not except the time of Sir Harford Jones, for whatever influence we may then have possessed was owing, not to him, but to Malcolm; and the sending two Envoys to urge, the one English, the other Indian, interests, was like the right hand bidding, at an auction, against the left, or Sir Walter Scott cutting one hole for the cat, and another, in the same door, for the kitten.

The moral is obvious. But for India, we have comparatively a small interest in Persia; through India, one which cannot be overrated. Is it not self-evident that India, which now enjoys the privilege of paying the piper, should have the control of the proceedings of the Mission? At present the Indian Viceroy is "kept informed;" that is to say, he gets certain information by a telegraph liable at any moment to be cut, and fuller intelligence three weeks or a month after date; any instructions or hints he may give being subject to the approval of the Foreign Office in London, the Envoy's direct superior.

Is this subordination of the greater—the only really important—interest, to the less—the comparatively trivial—in accordance with common sense? Is it sufficient reason to pursue it that it gives the Foreign Office a piece of lucrative patronage? We have often wondered that more attention has not been drawn to this question, to which, as any one will see who has access to the last Blue-book on the subject, there are really not two sides. There is no reason why it should not be possible at once to rectify this enormous and long-perpetuated blunder.

There is one point which we must approach with bated breath. It is the question of the presents customary at every Oriental Court, and the omission to offer which is well understood to be a deliberate slight. It is like the conduct of the man who would not put on a wedding garment, and was "cast into outer darkness." We are fully persuaded that, on the one hand, much of the outer darkness, as regards the favour of the Persian Court, in which our Envoys have generally lived, has been owing to their seeming parsimony (which is always attributed to themselves, and makes them personally, as well as politically, "unpalatable," for no Oriental will ever believe that the Queen sends Envoys to a Court where certain marks of goodwill and respect or regard are usual, yet withholds the means, without which they cannot be rendered), while we know as a fact that the Foreign Office, being badgered in the House against all Secret-Service expenditure, are too regardless of their country's interest to bring the Government majority to bear in insisting on an outlay the absolute necessity of which no well-informed person would deny.

A letter from Professor Vambéry, in another part of our impression, will show the very different spirit with which the Russians approach this matter in Oriental Courts, and the result. Were the Persian Mission, as we have recommended, once again entrusted to the Government of India, the reasonable expectations on this head—reasonable because in accordance with custom—of an Oriental Court would assuredly be met at Teheran without undue or irrational outlay. By the present "system" of putting the Persian Mission under the control of the wrong authority, and withholding the usual gratifications, we are simply raising difficulties in our own way. Why not drop the "system"? Why raise a stone wall for the express purpose of dashing your head against it?
